BEIRUT, Lebenon, March 20

—With the two-month-old cease-fire Syria helped negotiate in Lebanon slowly unraveling, Prime Minister Rashid Karami and other Lebanese leaders today flew to Damascus and met with President Hafez al-Assad of Syria on the deadlocked issue of arranging a presidential succession in Lebanon.

For the last week, there has been intermittent shelling and sniping along Beirut's battered confrootation line, which runs from the destroyed Seafront botel district, where the right-ist-held Holiday Inn has acquired some new gashes, to the Damascus highway and up to the Presideotial Palace et

Mr. Jumblat has said such things before, but at a time when almost all sides show signs of exhaustion with a nearly year old civil war between Christians and Moslems and leftists and rightists, which has claimed perhaps 10,000 lives and ruined the economy, he commands the one private he commands the one private army in Lebanon that has not been wearied in battle. Mr. Jumblat has incurred the ire of Syria, which is trying through laborious triangular negotiations with Lebanon's right-wing Christians and traditional Moslem leaders to find e graceful, negotiated succes-sion to Mr. Franjieh. But so far there has been no sign whatsoever that anything resembling a conseosus has emerged, and Mr. Jumblat asserted that be believed Syria was changing its position and had decided to "let Franjieh fall like a ripe fruit."

"I am not unhappy with the Syriens," Mr. Jumblat continued, speaking in French.

In a highly delicate and explosive situation, the Syrians have cast themselves in the role of the protector of the highly unpopular Mr. Franjieh. CUBA IS EXPANDING ROLE IN CARIBBEAN republics. Already, Prime Minister Aiready, Prime Minister Forbes Burnham of Guyana has promised Cuba that it could use Guyana airfields to transport troops and supplies for Cuban forces in Africa in any effort to liberate Rhodesia and South-West Africa from white minority rule.

desia and South-West Africa from white minority rule.

Mr. Burnham, the uncontested political leader of Guyana even though his fellow blacks are outnumbered by East Indians, bas recently put his country on a path toward a Marxist society. He bas stimulated high-level contacts with Cuba to the point where Administration officials believe thet Prima Minister Castro has become his most important ally.

Jamaican Ties to Cuba

At the other end of the Caribbean, Prime Minister Michael N. Manley of Jamaica has also been cultivating closer relations with Mr. Castro, whom be first met in September 1973.

met in September 1973.

There are understood to be 83 Cubans in Jamaica helping build a dam, a school and a factory, "With 20 percent unemployment in Jamaica, it makes you wonder why they need Cuban construction groups." need Cuban construction crews," a United States official re-

In the Administration assess-ment, Mr. Manley is basically a democratic socialist who does not seek to impose a Com-munist system on the 1.9 mil-lion Jamaicans, But the United States officials worry that Jamaica's grave and deteriorating economic situation—with "only a week and a balf's foreign exchange validity." as one put it—may drive Mr. Manley to assume authoritarian

There is concern in Washington, too, over Mr. Castro's presentation in the Caribbean of Cuba as a revolutionary libera-tor of blacks—not only Cuba's blacks, but also blacks in Angola and perhaps in other parts of Africa in the future.

'Really Worried'

"I'm really worried about this," a high-ranking State Department official said. "Of course there has been a race problem in the Caribbean for a long long time—poor blacks and rich whites. The slavery neritage is not remote to them. With Castro it's dynamite— heroic blacks fighting white

Another official took a some what calmer view, noting that Mr. Castro had used the black revolutionary theme occasionally in the past "whenever he thinks it is a good time to flait tha United States." He recalled that in the 1960's Mr. Castro sponsored black-power broadcasts by Robert Williams, a fugitive from North Carolina courts, over what was called "Radio Free Dixie." Mr. Williams later returned to the United States disenchanted with Cuba.

Administration officials also say that Prime Minister Burnham of Guyana was recently disappointed to find few blacks in positioos of authority in Marginal Economies Decline But the rise of leftist senti-ment among the 15.7 million people of the Caribbean co-incides with decline of marginal economies in Halti, the Dominican Republic and such islands as Barbados, Grenada and St. Lucia. This, together with a spread of racial tensions, could create a volatile situation, the Administration officials believe.

"Mind you," said one, "the moderate leaders still predominate," and he named the leaders of Barbados, Trinidad-Tobago, Bahamas and Haiti. Few if any United States of ficials believe that Mr. Castro would attempt to send Cuban military forces to assist revolutionaries in other parts of the Caribbean,

Rather, it is noted at the highest levels of the Administra-tion that in the last two years the Cuban leader has taken pains to portray himself as a Latin American statesman—en-tertaining heads of government from Jamaica, Trinidad-Tobago, Venezuela, Mexico and Panama and cultivating official state

My Dearest,

Can I ever forget that last waltz at the Plaza?

It was the night before you sailed for France, and you looked so brave and handsome in your uniform. I must have been the proudest girl in the whole world when you cut in and said "I can't let another man have even one dance with my sweetheart."

Then you told me that you'd never loved me so much as that night. You said I looked so fragile that I seemed to float around the ball-room on wings of lace.

You asked me to wait for you until the Great War is over, and of course I will.

Yours forever, Lucy

The look of romance from long ago:
this is the youngest, newest look for spring evenings.
Sweet as an old love letterstill faintly scented with rose sachet.

Lace and soft, soft netting, to surround you like sheer mist. All lovely, lovely enough to make even a modern-day hero whisper "sweetheart."

Now where did we find all this charm, in Great Aunt Lucy's steamer trunk?

Nope, in the show-room of a 26-year-old designer, Karen Tepper, who's so bright that she owns her own company, called Karen. And so young in heart that when we asked her where she'd wear her "New Nostalgia", she said, "To a discotheque. . or maybe to a picnic in the park.

With a picture frame hat." That's young.

And so is this whole collection.

We've sketched our own two favorites here for you.

The drawstring neck tunic dress, and the deep v'd cap-sleeved dress.

for sizes s.m. and l, at 84.00 each.

All the lace (and the netting) is embroidered nylon, so delicate you can see through it to the slender polyester slips beneath. But you'll see for yourself when you come to informal modeling of our Karen collection.

Tomorrow from 12:30 to 2 in our Young Expression Shop on three, Sweetheart.

RUMORS OF A COUP RISE IN ARGENTINA

Mrs. Peron Invited to Elite Regiment's Celebration, but Sends Minister Instead

Special to The New York Times BUENOS AIRES, March 20-Lieut. Gen. Jorge Rafael Videla, the likely head of a government junta if the Argentine armed forces seize power, chatted amiably today ovar champagna with Peronist ministers at a regimental anniver sary party.

The party at the San Martin mounted grenadiers regiment here took place, like a strange ritual, against the hackground of well-founded rumors of a military coup to overthrow President Isabel Martinez de

Mrs. Perón, who had been in-vited, did not show up for the celebration of the 164th anniversary of the elite regiment, which provides the presidential guard, but she sent the Minister of Defense, Jose A. Deheza, to represent her.

Also on hand were Migual de Unamuno, the Minister of Labor, Raul Quijano, the Foreign Minister; Senator Italo Luder, president of the Senate; and Nicasio Sanchez Toranzo, the president of the Chamber of Deputies—ail Peronist party representatives.

Some members of Congress have heen quietly removing re-frigerators and personal effects from their offices in the Congress building in expectation of a military coup.

Tank Units Deployed

There has been visible deployment of tank units in the suburbs of greater Buenos Aires, and three hatalions of marines have been brought from the big naval base at Puerto Belgrano to the port

These movements form part of the preparations of the armed forces for a takeover. But the final decision rests with General Videla, the 51year-old commander of the army, who was presumably the target of an assassination attemot on Monday. A bomb explosion in the parking lot behind the army general com-mand killed one civilian and wounded more than 20 persons including four colonels, A traffic delay brought General Vide-la to the scene of the explosion a few minutes late.

Violence Rose in Week

The bombing was part of an escalation of political violence this week in which eight policemen have been killed by left-wing extremeists, while at least 40 persons, mostly students and union delegates considered leftists, have been kidnapped and shot to death by right-wing terrorist groups.

The Government of Mrs. Peron has declared its determined support of the campaign by the armed forces and security agencies to combat the left wing extremists, who are a mixture of Peronist guerrillas and Marxist revolutionaries.

But the leaders of the armed forces have reached the conclusion, according to military sources, that the failure of the Government to deal effectively with severe inflation, corruption in Government and Peromist labor unions, and the intensification of subversive vi-olenca have made necessary a strong military regime. There was no visible signs of animosity between General Videla and other military leaders and the Peronist ministers during the parade by the grenadiers and the reception at the regimental headquarters that

Athens Ruin May Be Jail Of Socrates

By STEVEN V. ROBERTS

ATHENS, March 20 — An American archeologist believes that he has identified the prison where Socrates spent the last month of his life and was executed as the statement of the last month of the last month of his life and was executed as the statement of the last month of his life and was executed as the statement of the last month of his life and was executed as the statement of the last month of his life and was executed as the statement of the last month o cuted oo charges of corrupting the youth of Athens in 399

"The evidence falls short of formal proof," said Eugene Vanderpool, professor of archeology emeritus at the American School of Classical Studies here. "But it seems to take account of all we know. It's

The prison is one of the most famous buildings of classical Athens, the scene of two major Socratic dialogues, the Crito and the Phaedo. It was here that Socrates met with his loyal friends and refused their offer to help him escape. their offer to help him escape He made a covenant with the state to uphold the law, Socrates told them, and even if the law had been applied unfairly, "we ought not to retaliate or render evil for evil to anyone, whatever evil we may have suffered from him." Professor Vanderpool, who Professor Vanderpool, who is 69, first came to Greece in 1932 and has worked here almost continuously ever since. According to the Phaedo, he noted in an interview, the prison was near the law courts of Athens, but the precise sita has always eluded scholars. Tourists are usually told that, it was located in a oearby cave.

it was located in a oearby cave.

Tha bullding identified by Professor Vanderpool lies in the southwest corner of the ancient Agora, or market, at the foot of the Acropolis. It was first discovered in 1949 and was dated to the fifth cersury B.C. by pottery found beneath the floor. Archeologists could never determina its function, however, and it was vaguely described as a public building and then forgotten. Today it is little more than a pile of gray limestone blocks a pile of gray limestone blocks overgrown with weeds. One morning last winter, Professor Vanderpool picked up a copy of the Phaedo, which describes the death of Socrates. A classics scholar at Princetoo, Class of 1929, the professor likes to read some ancient Greek every day, just to keep in practice.

He came to the passage where Socrates takes a bath before drinking the hemlock. The words stirted his memory. That building near the agora, he recalled, had bathing facilities in one room—a small basin in the corner and a large storage jar sunk into the floor. Perhaps Socrates had the "royal suite, so to speak, a room with e bath," joked Professor Vanderpool. After all, he noted, the philosopher was a special prisoner with wealthy friends. Crito describes how he did the jailer a favor to he did the jailer a favor to gain admittance to Socrates'

The professor consulted the original field reports of the 1949 season compiled by the lata Margaret Crosby. One entry described 13 small jars found at the bottom of a cisfound at the bottom of a cis-tern, and the picture "jumped out at me." he said.

The vessels are usually described as medicine jars, but few of them were found elsewhere in the Agora. Such a large number could have heen kept in the prison for the express purpose of administeriog poison, Professor Vanderpool reasoned.

Tha photograph of another discovery caught his eye, a small statue of a bearded man The figure was very similar, the professor realized, to a well-known statue of Socrates in the British Museum.
"After they executed Socrates

the Athenians immediately had qualms," noted Professor Vao-derpool, "We also know they liked to bave images of philos-ophers around, like icons. We can speculate that's why they had this statue in the building.

In the writings of Plutarch, the professor then found a description of the execution of Phocian, en Athenian general, in 318 B.C. While the general was preparing to swallow poison, a large procession honor-ing Zeus passed the prison.

The most beautiful deep ultramarine gemstone is Lapis, beloved from ancient times in Babylon and Assyria and even cited in the Old Testament (as "sapphire"). Indeed, the finest blue-to-purple Lapis has always come from Asia. Long a favorite with Chinese lapidaries, Lapis has been carved for figurines and pendants, but only rarely is material of quality available for necklace beads except at very high cost.

By EMANUEL PERIMUTTER

The Federal Bureau of Investigation said yesterday that it had begun an inquiry to learn whether Federal law was violated in the abduction of the two girls of Katherine Leigh Boyd Mellon and her divorced husband, Seward Prosser Mellon, the Pittsburgh hanker.

The children were abducted from outside their mother's house in Brooklyn Friday morning.

In disclosing tha F.B.I. investigation, a spokesman for the agency said: "If it proves that the children were kidnapped, the guilty ones would be subject to 10 years in jail, a $10,000 fine or both. For impersonating Federal officers, the penalty is a $1,000 fine, three years in jail or both."

More Investigations

The case was also under intigation by District Attorney Eugene Gold of Brooklyn and the New York City Police Department. A spokesman for Mr. Gold said he would be studying the incident for a few days.

As for the police, an official in the department said they were puzzled by the case.

"There were some shady characters who knew that the children were with Mrs. Mellon," the oficial said. "We lon," the oficial said. we don't know whether there is another explanation for how the children disappeared and how they wound up in the posesion of Mr. Mellon. We have lot of things to clear up."

Mellon Custody Fight From 1911 Is Recalled

The abduction of the children of Seward Prosser Mel-lon recalls another child-cus-tody case involving his late grand-uncle, Andrew Mellon, the financier and Secretary of the Treasurey who was head of the Mellon clan.

In 1911, when Mr. Mellon was trying to divorce bis wife, the former Nora Mc-Mullen, be had her ousted from their home and seized their two children by court order in Pennsylvania. The children were their son, Paul, and a daughter, the late Ailsa Mellon Bruce, who was the wife of David K. E. Bruce, the diplomat.

Mr. Mellon wanted to sua for divorce, but sought to avoid publicity. Suddenly, the Pennsylvania Legislature passed a law that took away from a wife the privilege of having a trial of a divorce suit by a jury and leaving it to the judge to decide whether the wife might have that privilege.

Mrs. Mellon was an Englishwoman who had the Emhassy on her side. Tha storm of protest from the press here and in England led to the case's being decided by a jury.

The couple were eventually divorced and each parent received custody of the children for six months a year. Their son, Paul, now 63 years old, lives in the Wash-

WASHINGTON, March 20 (UPI) - Pollution from a proposed power plant in southvestern Utah's panoramic canyon country could be seen for 100 miles or more and might be smelled in three national parks, according to a preliminary National Park Service

Three utilities want to build the 3,000-megawatt generating station and four underground coal mines to fuel it. A new town is planned nearby to meet an anticipated 14,000 population influx.

Many state and local officials favor the Kaiparowits project because it would bring tax revenue and jobs to an area suffering from unemployment. But environmentalists oppose t, noting that the site is within 00 miles of some of America's most scenic areas, including the Grand Canyon. The plant would be 20 miles from Lake Powell National Recreation Area, within 30 miles of Bryce Canyon National Park and 60 miles of Capitol Reef National Park. The Park Service, using En vironmental Protection Agency and Weather Service computer models, studied the impact on "The objectionable odor of nitrogen dioxide would be ex-pected in portions" of all three parks, its report said.

Gifts to 986 public and private colleges and universities across the nation fell by $80 million, to an estimated $2.16 billion, in the academic year that ended June 30, 1975, a 3.6 percent decline from 1974, according to a survey by the Council for Financial Aid to

All of the decrease is ac counted for by a 15 percent decline in gifts for capital purposes, to 39 percent, for its lowest share of total donations. Gifts for current operations rose 5 percent and represent 61 percent of the total. This is latest annual survey of gifts and bequests marked only the second time since 1957-58 that voluntary support to higher education had de-creased. The recession and a consequent drop in the market value of stocks, which heavily influences foundation grants, for example, were believed largely responsible for the decrease. Still, it is the fourth consecutive year that gifts exceeded $2 billion.

Despite the overall decline, support to the 160 public institutions listed rose by 9.4 percent, or $31.5 million. They were the only group to register gains in the last two surveys by the council, a nonprofit service organization that seeks to spur voluntary financial support of higher education.

Rise in Corporate Giving Also, there was a small, $3 million, or 0.8 percent, increase in gifts from corporations and a rise of 12.9 percent, or $20

This was offset by a $35 million, 7.1 percent, decline in foundation gifts, a $2.8 million drop in support from religious denominations and a decline for the second consecutive year in support—virtually all in bequests—of both alumni and other individuals, who nonetheless account for the largest share of support at 46.4 per-gave $40 million less than the previous year while alumni gave $23 million less.

A group of 69 major private universities got $648 million. and continued to receive more than 40 percent of all voluntary support. Private men's colleges had the largest decline in donations, support off 21 percent to $17.9 million.

Donations to professional and special schools dropped nearly 18 percent, while private women's colleges bad a decline of only 1 percent and private coeducational schools 8.5 per-

Although total alumnl giving dropped, the share going into annual alumni funds rose to $176.8 million, for a 5 percent increase, as the number of donors grew by 3 percent to 2.5 million. But the percentage of alumni who contributed remained the same at 17.7 per-

F.C.C. TO DISCIPLINE CITIZENS BAND RADIO

WASHINGTON, March 20 (AP)—The Federal Communications Commission has told Con tions Commission has told Congress that it will ask for $3.3 million extra to cope with the boom in citizens band radios. In addition to seeking more funds for the next fiscal year, according to Richard E. Wiley, commission chairman, the F.C.C. has shifted $213,000 to cope with the situation now and the commission staff is looking for ways to transfer another $335,000.

The citizens band, or CB, phenomenon became the focus of a House Appropriations subcommittee hearing Tuesday af-ter Mr. Wiley presented bis pre-pared statement on the commission's new $51.4-million budget. Mr. Wiley rejected a sug-gestion that the whole thing might be solved by eliminating the license requirement for CB

On a chain around your neck, of course.

The name is Halston. Just Halston. Halston is quiet. The way a Rolls Royce is quiet. All you'll notice is a deep, throaty purr of luxury. And Halston is very, very sure of itself, even though it's only one year old.

Because in this short year, Halston has become one of the world's great fragrances, which was exactly what we expected. After all, Halston's creator is one of the great men in the world of fashion

Halston, by Halston, has little, light Oriental tones (for mystery), new floral blends (for youth) and what professional perfumers call "green notes" (for sparkle).

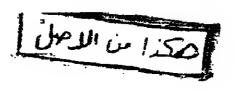

You don't have to spend 60.00 unless you really want to. Here's a run-down of what Halston's Halston will run you. Perfume: 14 oz. 18.50, 1/2 oz. 32.50, 1 oz. 60.00 Spray Perfume: 1/5 oz. 15.00 Cologne: 21/2 oz. 10.00, 4 oz. 15.00, 8 oz. 25.00 Cologne Spray: 21/2 oz. 11.00 Perfumed Bath Powder: 5 oz. 10.00

Collect your Halston birthday bean special. This is the one you do wear around your neck. A golden metal Elsa Peretti "bean" filled with Halston solid perfume (05 oz.) and strung on a 24-karat gold plated necklace. It's yours for only 6.50 with any Halston fragrance purchase. And any scent that whispers "This woman is sure of herself yet mysterious, sophisticated but young and sparkling" makes 60.00 sound like a sound investment, doesn't it?

Now, Elegant is a word we seldom use. We think it's suffered from ad-writer overkill. But elegant is the only word that describes everything about Halste Even the art-object bottle (designed by Elsa Peretti) is so non-commercial that it has only a tiny band of ivory paper printed with Halston's name. And you can take that off if you want to play super cool.

Of course we weren't entirely serious about chaining Halston arour your neck. You know the places we'd recommend for Halston unchained: your ears, your elbows, your knees, your twilights, your midnights. And how about your tomorrow morning when your Altman's opens?

Miss Hearst spent the night in her cell at the San Mateo County Jail, where she has spent every night since ber arrest last Sept. 18. United States marshals brought her into San Francisco this morning to await the jury's verdict.

Federal District Judge Oliver

Albert Johnson, one of Miss Hearst's lawyers, visited her in her holding cell on the court-bouse's 20th floor this morning. He said she had been nervous and had complained of drafts in the cell. She had heen making caps for friends, he said.

Miss Hearst's trial opened Jan. 27. She took the witness stand in her own defense and said she had taken part in the robbery hecause she had feared that her kidnappers, the self-styled Symbionese Liberation Army, would murder her if she did not. They kidnapped her on Feb. 4, 1974.

The Government, represented by United States Attorney James L. Browning Jr. argued that Miss Hearst had become a member of the revolutionary hand and in that role had been a willing participant in the robbers.

The case was given to the jury yesterday morning after an hour-long charge by Judge Carter

Court officials said the jurors had all the evidence in the room where they deliberated. This would include the tape recorded messages that carried Miss Hearst's voice—as well as the voices of some of her captors—that were issued by the Symbionese group in the winter and spring of Equipment to reproduce those recordings was provided to the jury. The same equipment could be used to play a tape recording of a jall visit last Sept. 20, two days after Miss Hearst's arrest, when her childhood friend Patricia Tobin spoke with her in the jail. The Government argued that Miss Hearst made certain revealing statements to Miss Tobin that

The jury also had with it the stacks of still photographs made by the bank's surveillance cameras, which were turned on within seconds after the robbery started. Jerky motion pictures were made up from those photos, and the jury had those, too.

There were stacks of documents, all tied to Miss Hearst others by forgers with the part of the start of the st

There were stacks of documents, all tied to Miss Hearst either by fingerprints or handwriting. There were products of her months of living with William and Emily Harris, the surviving members of the group that kidnapped her.

Out of all this and the parade of 66 witnesses who testified before them, the jury had to find the answer to the crucial question: Did Miss Hearst go willingly to the bank that day, and did she willingly participate in the robbery?

Miss Hearst was not on trial on the charge that she became a member of the S.L.A., although evidence of her continued association with the radical group has been a major factor in the evidence against

Nor was she on trial for occurrences in Los Angeles, where she fired an automatic carbine into a street and storefront as she sought to assist the Harrises wheo they were about to be captured by store clerks who suspected them of shoplifting.

As a result of that and subsequent events, the Harrises and Miss Hearst face 19 felony counts in state court in Los Angeles. The Harrises were taken there soon after they were arrested on Sept. 18.

They are awaiting trial, and have sought delays because they want to be tried with Miss Hearst, who has seemed to turn against them in her testimony bere. Her chief defense counsel, F. Lee Bailey of Bostoo, has said he will fight to keep them from being tried with Miss Hearst.

Beame Urges Broad Changes In Towing-Service Regulations

Broad changes in city laws of $455,715 in the fiscal year and regulations governing ended last June 30 between income from permit holders were proposed yesterday by Mayor Beame.

Citing "growing public concern" over excessive competition among tow operators, the Mayor said:

"We've received numerous complaints that tow trucks, their lights flashing, race past intersections, violating traffic laws and the rights of pedestrians and motorists in their zeal to get a car 'on the hook' and into the repair shop."

Pending approval of required tegislation, Mr. Beame declared a moratorium on the issuance of unrestricted licenses to tow trucks and franchises for towing on limited-access highways.

At the outset of the program she was, epparently, very nervous, and her play-ing of Locatelli's Sonata in was so unsteady, so edgy in tone and so faulty in in-tonation that if things had gone on that way, her debut would have been a failure.

But with the beginning of Strauss's Sonata in F minor, she began to settle down. and her playing improved greatly. By the time Miss Chung got to Hindemith's Unaccompanied Sonata (Op. 25, No. 3), she seemed to be in full technical and musical command, and the work re-ceived an incisive perform-She was fortunate in hav-

Juilliard Students An Exuberant Duo

When should artists err on the side of overexuberance if not when they're young? At Carnegie Recital Hall last Sunday night, two extrava-gantly gifted Juilliard students gave a debut program that mede up in sizzling ardor whet it may have lacked in interpretive refinement, and it was greet fun to hear. The violinist Naoko Tanaka was born in Tokyo, and like so many graduates of the Toho Schoul, she plays with uncanny ease and security. Technical problems seem hardly to exist, and Miss Tanaka's enthusiastic commitment is echoed in performances of considerable passion At the mument, she purchases this intensity et the cost of tonal niceties, but surely the rough edges will smonth in due time. Robert Shannon, an Oberlin alumnus in the doctoral program at Juilliard, is also a player of volatila temperament, sometimes given to banging, but otherwise highly impressive in his control of the many aspects of pianistic technique. As a partner, ha was sensitive to ensemble needs without yielding his nwn individuality. If their proficient performances of the Brahms Sonatensetz and Mozart's Sonata in G (K. 379) were shortweight in such matters as elegant shaping of line, Miss Tanaka and Mr. Shannon gave a brilliant eccount of the Bartók Second Sonata Obviously they felt thoroughly at bome with its atmospheric tension and rhythmic pulsings, even as they later relished the soaring romanticism of the Strauss Soneta in E flat. Tha Strauss, in fact, cries out for just the sort of hot-blooded fervor that the duo provided in abundant measure. ROBERT SHERMAN

Colson Strings Introduced Here An instrumental group that lives e kind of communal life on an estate in France made its first New York appearance on Wednesday night in Town Hall, It goes by the name of its organizer and leading violinist, the Andrée Colson Chamber Orchestra. Its dozen members include two male cellists; the rest are women. The string ensemble, which does without a conductor, began with three Baroque works, a Suite from Campra's "Idoménée," Handel's Con-certo Grosso (Op. 6, No. 1) and Vivaldi's Concerto Grosso (Op. 3, No. 11). The playing here was quite winning. It was rich and bomogeneous tonally, the attacks and rhythms were sharply defined, and tonal weight was varied for varied effects. performances that gave real satisfaction.

In other works, the results were not always so admirable, chiefly because of small but irritating pitch problems. Rossini's Quartet No. 1, Lekeu's Adagio and Roussel'e Sinfonietta, however, were tackled with a fine regard for differing styles, and Lekeu's

The program consists of four works by Mr. Jooss, "The Big City," "Pevane on the Death of an Infanta," "A Ball in Old Vienne" and "The Green Tehle." The first and the last of these ballets —usually re-garded as the chireographer's masterworks - heve been in the Joffrey repertory for some years; the middle couple, almost mure vi-gnettes than ballets, were be-ing given by the Joffrey for the first time bere.

el music, thet stately yet sensuous unfolding of vihrancy, and Mr. Looss has used it for a minieture of death, enclosure and stifling nppression. The Infanta, with her teased-out wig and panniers, looks like some haunted fugitive from Velázquez, some Hepsburg victim of the War of the Spenish Succession. She is surrounded hy a men-ecing court, dressed by Sigurd Leeder in crinolines and stiff armor, and she smiles et them wanly. But like a little butterfly, her life is ex-tinguished. The cold lines of the court, contrasted with the flutterings of the Infanta, the chill of protocol end the agony of cold isoletion, are all sensitively reelized. Francesca Corkle was just right for the slightly lost, even blurred image of the Infanta, and the ensemble proved chillily eccurate.

"A Ball in Old Vienna" is a chandelier-style ballet but not quite so pushy as the Ballets Russes genre thet choreographers such as Léo-nide Massine and David Lichine made their own, For one thing. It is not set to Strauss

The music is charming—It hes a faded period suggestion of the past, a scent of ald levender and a feel for aid lece. Once again, the thing that is so impressive about Mr. Joose's choreography is his remarkable sense of construction, the motor angles of the dences, those kinetic thrusts of force. It is all so original. Interestingly, the Joffrey company quite natu-rally dances the ballet, as it does all the Jooss repertory where appropriate, on pnint whereas, of course, the ballets were originally con-ceived for soft shoe. Howev-er, the character of the choreography is not changed by one whit, because it was the form of the dances that counted, not the detail.

The company gives "A Ball in Old Vienna" with greet end confident style. Gary Chryst is surprisingly effec-tive as a somewhat epicene dancing mester (unrecogniz-eble, in fact, from his usual image), and es the two pairs of lovers, Denise Jackson with Kevin McKenzie and Jan Hanniford with Paul Sutherland, dance with suave abandon. One notices in passing that such steps as the entrechat-surely once unknown in the Jooss vocabulary—are now ecceptable, hut, as I am sure Mr. Jooss understands, to change is to

This set of saccharine lyrics about a woman's fall-work, getting married by t a widow is redeemed by the music. Ton often however, it ie sung with so much emo-tional force that the listener feels drowned in sentiment that robs the music of its touching lyricism.

Miss Ameling's voice, with its light, glinting velvety sound, caressed the songs while she gave the words and musical phrases just the right drametic color to suggest rather than impose the songs' moods on the audience. The translation from Russian happens to be good and rarely makes the composer's inimitable style sound like leider. And if Miss Amelling's voice did not have all the force and color needed, particularly in the lower ed, particularly in the lower register, she did muster np lots of vocal characterization to bring the cycle off. Purcell's "From Rosy Bow'rs," charmingly sung with the text carefully enum-

Members of Local 20 of the Carpenters Union are donating their labor this weekend to install a new ceiling in the Jacques Marchais Center of Tibetan Art on Lighthouse Hill on Staten Island. The original ceiling began to fall last autumn, according to Rosemary. Tung, the Tibetan museum curator. She said that "Without the donation of the new ceiling, valued at $1,600, the museum could very possibly not have opened this season."

Hoving: Luxuriating in the 'Tiff at Tiffany

By JUDY KLEMESRUD

Walter Hoving, the Peck's bad boy of Fifth Avenue merchandisers, leaned back in his chair in his spacious woodpaneled office on Tiffany's fifth floor, fingered the golden "Try God" pin in his lapel, and flashed a rather victorious

After all, the controversy swirling around his Lincoln's birthday advertisement, in which Mr. Hoving had inadvertently put 10 aphorisms into the mouth of Abraham Lincoln that the Great Emancipator had never really said, was beginning to die down, but not before the ad and its subsequent retraction had resulted in what Mr. Hoving called "thousands of dollars of free publicity"

The latest "tiff at Tiffeny's," as it was dubbed, came to a head when a charge-account customer, Dona Fowler Kaminsky, a labor contract negotiater Kaminsky, a salor contact negotia-tor for the Newspaper Guild who was offended by the "antilabor, antiworking-people philosophy" of the Lincoln ad, wrote to Mr. Hoving that she would "think twice" before entering Tiffany's

Mr. Hoving fired off a reply notifying Mrs. Kaminsky that he was closing her charge account. He said later that he had closed several accounts in the past as a result of rudeness, and saw no reason for "retailers to take guff from rude costomers.

One would think that a 78-year-old aristocrat who runs a company associated with taste, class, elegance and af-

Mr. Hoving who is board chairman of Triffary & Company, and who owns 20 percent of its stock ("No one else owns more than 2 percent," he said proudly), has had most of his "fun" over the years writing a series of about 25 essay-type and for his company. Some of them are puckish, some echo his conservative views of the economy, some are controversial for controversy's sake. But rarely do they go unnoticed.

His best known attempt at giving his views to the public came in when he took out an ad in Wall Street Journal, orging the First National City Bank to "put out those glaring lights" on its seven-story metal Christmas tree on Park Avenue. What especially offended Mr. Hoving about the tree was its neon-lit star sembling the bank's logo.

Incensed, Mr. Hoving wrote: "Dear First National City Bank: We are very sad to see that you are once again polluting the esthetic atmosphere of year, but has failed to emerge since, Mr. Hoving counts this as a victory; Walter Wriston, the hank's chairman, declines to comment. "Walter and I are still friends," Mr. Hoving insisted. "He hasn't answered my letters, but we've seen each other at parties, and we talk to each other."

Typical of Mr. Hoving's more humorous efforts is the 1963 ad titled "overheard." It reads: "Last Saturday a young woman walked into Tiffany's with her five-year-old son. The boy turned to his mother and asked somewhat belligerently, Mummy, what place is this? The mother hesitated a moment, then replied rather wearly, This, dear, is Mummy's F.A.O. Schwarz."

In more recent months, as the economy has had its ups and downs, Mr. flowing has taken to writing what he calls his "common sense economic ads." all of which carry his conservative philosophy. So far there have been four of them: "The Truth About Capita-lism," "The Nitty-Gritty About Socia-lism," "Is Inflation the Real Problem?"

and "Is Profit a Dirty Word?"

Judging from the response of readers, the ads have been effective. He says that almost 98 percent of the hundreds

The decision was announced after a meeting of the Thai Cabinet that followed e deadlock in negotiations begun nearly a year ago between the two countries on the future of American military personnel in Thailand. Prime Minister Kukrit Pramoj said that the Government had issued the order because agreement could not be reached on the question of Thai jurisdiction over American personnel. There are about 4,000 American military personnel, mostly noncombat troops, in Thailand. The United States had been negotisting in the hope of keeping about 3,000 troops to operate certain installations. Most of the combat forces had been withdrawn by last Dec. 20. [Page 1, Column 8.] Prime Minister Ian D. Smith of Rhodes said that he might be prepared to revoke the country's 11-year-old unilateral declaration of independence from Britain in the attempt to resolve the constitutional crisis with the black majority. At a news conference following the breakdown in talks with Joshua Nkomo, a black nationalist leader, Mr. Smith said in reply to a question that his Government had explored the possibility of revoking the independence declaration in the framework of the search for a constitu-tional settlement. He said: "If I am satisfied and it could be shown to me that this, or any other decision, is necessary in the in-terests of Rhodesia, I will lend my support to carrying out that decision." [1:6-7,1

National North Carolina's primary on Tuesday may determine whether Ronald Reagan and Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama will stay in the Presidential race. Each has lost three times in other state primaries. Public opinion polls indicate that Mr. Reagan is likely to lose to President Ford and Mr. Wallace to Jimmy Carter. If the polls are confirmed by the voting, senior advisers to Mr. Reagan and Mr. Wallace say they will have to restudy their campaigns. Large blocs of delegations—61 to the Democratic convention and S4 to the Republican - are also at Skirmishing for position in this year's Congressional races is well under way across the country. Party leaders regard the election as the most important in years. For Republicans, it is a chance to regain the House seats lost in their 1974 defeat and to give their party once again a strong minor-ity in the House. It is also an opportunity to win the seats of four popular Democratic Senators who are retiring and to take advantage of what Republicans believe is an anti-Washington, anti-incumbent mood in the country to defeat several of the 18 Democratic Senators running for re-election. Public health specialists are to decide soon whether an new influenza vaccine must be developed for next winter's flu season. An outbreak of flu at Fort Dix, N.J., last month startled the specialists because it was believed to be a new virus, possibly a harbinger of another worldwide strain, but a similar virus has not been found in any other place in the country. But advisers on vaccine pol-icy to the Federal Government appear to be

Officials of the natioo's 1,000 two-year community colleges, which have opened that way to higher education for the academically unprepared and the poor, are worried that the doors may be slowly closing. Financial pressures and hardening attitudes among administrators about the functions of postsecondary education are threatening the policies of oon-selective edmissions and low tuition that have been the cornerstones of the community colleges, which have 3.8 million of the oution's 11.1 million college students. Rubin (Hurricane) Carter and John Artis exchanged prison numbers for freedom. Following a 15-minute hearing in Passaic County Court, their status instantly changed from murder convicts to suspects. Both are now presumed innocent pending a new trial on triple murder charges. Mr. Carter, a former middleweight boxer, and Mr. Artis had each served nina years of life sentences. Their convictions were overturned last Wednesday by the New Jersey Suprema Court. A second trial has been granted and may be held this spring or next fall. [1:1-4.]

Law enforcement officials said that for the first time since 1957 New York's five Mafia families had been authorized by the national Mafia commission to initiate new members. They said that each family had been given permission to initiate 10 new members made up of men who were money-makers in the rackets, had no legal problems and were of proved loyalty. The initi-ation of new members was stopped in 1957 to prevent gangsters who were secretly informants for law enforcement agencies from gaining entry into Mafia families. A Justice Department official said that Initiation ceremonies had been held in Naw York for the ast month. [1.2-3.]

How the task force from the State Division of the Budget and Governor Carey's office saved the state construction agencies from fiscal collapse involved often Byzantine methods. The task force had to win over 150 banks, several insurance companies, a dozen independent state funds, the Federal Government and-most difficult of all—the trustees of the two state employee pensions systems. The strategies and setbacks illustrate much about the way state government has had to operate in the throes of the fiscal crisis and about the creative ways with which officials have coped with

D.A. and State Prosecutor Accuse Each Other

By TOM GOLDSTEIN ial to The New York Time

RIVERHEAD, L.I., March 17 -The six-month-old investigation into charges of sexual misconduct filed against the Suffolk County District Attorney has entered its final stages, with Henry F. O'Brien, the District Attorney, and Joseph P. Hoey, the special state prosecutor who was named to investigate the charges, accusing each other of behaving improperly.

"My life style is on trial here," said Mr. O'Brien, who has charged in court papers that the special prosecutor has painted him as "a habitue of gymnasiums and bothersome to oung men." Mr. Hoey, in turn, has accused Mr. racey, in turn, has accused

Mr. O'Brien of trying "to tamper with the grand jury system" and of engaging in "poitical machinations."
So far Mr. O'Brien—who last

September asked Governor Carey to appoint a special prose-cutor for this investigation has refused to testify hefore the special grand jury. It has met more than 25 times and has heard dozena of witnesses including many present and past associates and acquaintances of Mr. O'Brien.

"In the final analysis, I am being called upon to deny accusations mada against me by an admitted heroin user and convicted burglar," said Mr. O'Brien. "I have no intention of dignifying these false and vicious charges any further.

Background of Charges

The charges of sexual abuse and sexual misconduct, both misdemeanors, were filed last September by the Suffolk Po-lice Commissioner, Eugene R. lice Commissioner, Eugene R. Kelley. They were hased on an affidavit by Roger Barry Petersen, a convicted burglar and former client of Mr. O'Brien, who said that Mr. O'Brien had oral sex with him without his consent in May

The filing of the charges came two months after Mr. O'Brien announced he was investigating the Police Commissioner for possible "misconduct in office and other more serious crimes."

Mr. Hoey, e former United States Attorney for the Eastern District of New York, has been given jurisdiction over both matters as well as the authority to investigate the conduct of all members of the Suffolk Police Department and District Attorney's office.

Up to now, Mr. Hoey, with his staff of three lawyers has been focusing on the charges against Mr. O'Brien, and he expects this phase of the investigation to be completed within a month. The grand Jury can either exonerate or indict Mr. O'Brien, a husky, baiding 40-year-old bachelor who is the first Democratic District Attorney in the history of Suffolk

County. Another Phase Due

After that, Mr. Hoey said in an interview this week, he intends to impanel another grand jury to look into the allegations against Mr. Kelley. "That phase is equally complicated," said Mr. Hoey, adding that he has set no deadline for the completion of his investigation of his investigat for the completion of his investigation.

Mr. Hoey has been criticized hy Mr. O'Brien and his supporthy Mr. O'Brien and his supporters for the length of time the investigation has taken. "When I asked the Governor to supersede me, I thought it would last a couple of months at most," said Mr. O'Brien during a three-hour lunch interview the other day.

"I had the option to present the hare case to the grand jury," said Mr. Hoey. "That wouldn't have been fair. This grand jury will hear anybody who had any connection with tha case." Mr. Kelley, whose has said his initial concern was that someone could hlackmail Mr. O'Brien, has testified befere the grand jury seven times.

It is highly unusual for a police commissioner to file criminal charges against any kind against anyone, and the fact that Mr. Kelley filed charges of sexual abuse and sexual misconduct—which are rarely prosecuted—against the Dis trict Attorney is one of the more bizarre aspects of a bizarre case. The Public Gaze

By law, grand jury proceedings are conducted in secret but e great deal of information about this grand jury has come to public attention because witnesses in the proceedings must walk through e small room where reporters sit. PU 3d Add Witoesses are not prohibited by law from repeating what they testified about. As a re-sult, detailed accounts of the grand jury proceedings have appeared in Long Island newspapers. They have related how witnesses had been asked in the grand jury room about their sexual preferences and those of Mr. O'Brien.

It was these news accounts that led Mr. O'Brien last month to file z motion asking that a separate grand jury be impan-eled to hear the charges against him. In his court papers, he said that he was heing destroyed by "innuendo and rumor" and that Mr. Hoey was making "a main issue" over whether or not he was a ho.

Why Wilderness Films Are Wildly Popular

he most passionately politicel films heing made in this country today have nothing to do with government scandals or cover-ups hy highly placed poblic officials who goofed. They contain oo references to Watergate, Mao, détente, the CIA, Fanne Fox or even the Bicentennial. Thay make no pleas oo behalf of the underprivileged. They certainly aren't revolutionary threats from some underfed underground cooperative. Instead they are what the writers of irate letters to movie critics call "pure" entertainment, which is usually a eupbemism for mindless, They haven't the slightest Interest in current affairs or social problems, or, at least, oone that shows. They are totally devoid of sex and the only violence shown is nature's way. Apparently because of these things, they are films that parents by the carloads are dragging their children off to see in the fond belief that innoces is being simultaneously protected and served.

I'm talking about tha new "wilderness" movies with titles such as "Brother of The Wind," "The Life and Times of Grizzly Adams," "The Adventures of the Wilderness Family," "Challenge to Be Free" and "The Bears and I," all except the last (a Walt Disney production) having been financed and distributed outside the auspices of the major Hollywood companies. The films hegan appearing a year or so ago as a trickle. The trickle has now become a clearly defined wave that would, if I read the films correctly, carry us back to the glorious 19th century, when a man could be free to live life as he saw fit, when women, blacks, Indians and new arrivals with strange accents knew their places, when there was no pollution, when government was small and taxes even smaller, when all it took to get ahead was faith in God and a willingness to work.

To see one of these films is, perhaps, to enjoy a harmless adventure. To see two of them is to hegin to recognize a mode of operation. To see three is to understand that a seemingly sentimental longing for old-fashioned values is, on the other side, a furious cry of frustration and rage with political change, especially with a society that questions the morality of the-survival-of-the-fittest as a national policy. When you come out of one of these films, you're likely to think the country started going downhill the day the Federal Government took over the mails. The "wilderness" films not only glorify private enterprise as individual effort; they endow it with mythic nowers.

Here are some of the so-called plots:
In "Brother of The Wind," a hardy old man, in remarkably fice shape for his years, bas turned his hack on civilization to live as a hermit in the wilds of the Canadian Rockies. Most of the film is devoted to his raising four orphaned wolf pupples who, when they are fully grown and out on their own, are more slavishly grateful to the old man than any buman children would be.

"The Life and Times of Grizzly Adams" is about another loner, a man who, when falsely accused of a crime, abandons his small, motherless daughter and strikes out for the wilderness where he learns he can communicate with animals more meaningfully than with people. This fellow raises an orphaned grizzly bear cub. When, years later, his oame is cleared, the man elects to stay in the wilderness where the animals are his friends and look up to him, much as if the wilderness had become bis private plantation.

'Tetley's plans would have been a catastrophe for Stuttgart. He had to go.'

Tetley, Haydée and the Stuttgart management insist that Tatley's precipitate resignation was voluntary, that he was not forced out. Perhaps—nonetheless Tetley left under an avalancha of pressure from German critics.

"I don't know if anyone can really say exactly what went wrong or even what really happened," says Tetley himself, "but I certainly learned that being the director of a huga company like Stuttgart takes 100 percent of your time—the catch is that being a choreographer also takes 100 percent of your time."

Marcia Haydee agrees with Tetley's appraisal: "I think it's difficult to find a man who can be both a director and a choreographer—Balanchina, Bejart and, of course, Cranko are exceptions, but there are not many. Glen Tatley wanted to try, because ba loved the company, but the pressure that built up, especially this season, convinced him that ha could do much better work as a choreographer without the responsibility of directing the whola company."

To begin to understand the nature of the pressure that came to an ugly head in Stuttgart in January, it is necessary to look into the background of the Stuttgart Ballet tradition, which Continued on Page 8 are evidently too bad to be shown. From time to time Ben longs for Shirley's body even while castigating her art. Ben, in fact, longs for all the women. What provokes the audience to unscheduled tittering is the crudity of Osborne's juxtaposition of Beo arranging to sleep with Jo, and then, shortly afterward, of Sally offering to do the same. The sense polymorphous sexuality pervades the play. Ben's exwife, who turns up briefly, appears to speak for the dramatist when she says. "We've become islands at

To those who saw Os-borne's recent "West of Suez," it will be no surprise that this new play also ends in a gunsbot, or rather in a barrage. (Shooting the hero, stripping the heroice, and presenting a lesbian encounter are obligatory in the London theater this season.) Sally begs Ben not to die: "We all, the few of us, need one another." It sounds like irooy, hut Osborne appears to be behind her words.

John Osborne has every right to display in model the universal crisis which he finds focused in sexual shiftings, dashed ambitions, and washed-up feelings. The yobbos seem an inevitable diabolus ex machina, with their motiveless death-dealing, Beneath the interdestructiveness, however, the characters scarcely exist. The most sympathetic character is perhaps the old goods train which twice rumbles its way, by clever stagecraft, across the back of the set. Though it rolls over Jo, it at least brings the twisted events to he next time someone comes up to me, at a party or even in a locker-room, and, speaking of some recent entertainment I've reviewed. says, "Hey, did you see the same show I did?." I am not going to wince, I am not going to look weary, I am not going to lie down and ery. The implication of the question is clear: we've disagreed about the show, one of us is out of his skull, there is little need to ask which one. I am just going to look the fellow straight in the eye and tell him the truth. No, I didn't see the same show he did.

WALTER KERR

'Did I See the Same Show You Did?'

The fact of the matter is that reviewers and audiences live in almost entirely different theatrical worlds. Never mind traditional opening nights, when the rift between the two species is often at its most marked: the audience hooting and hollering away (in approval, with e standing ovation de rigueur at curtain-fall), the reviewers sitting mute and gelid until they can spirit themselves safely back to their fortresses and deliver themselves of what they trust will be the truth and what they hope will be prose

This split isn't really real. For there has been no actual audience present on such an occasion: producers and backers have assured themselves of a claque by confining tickets to well-wishers, actors and directors have gathered all the frieods and mothers they could muster. Thus everyone present is on the job, so to speak, performing a professional task of one sort or another; nobody's just come for the hell or the fun of it. The recent tendency to invite reviewers over e spread of previews, eliminating that ancient and artificial "opening," has surely been a step in the right direction; the situation is apt to be less schizoid.

But that's not what I'm really getting at. When we speak of audiences, we don't mean the paltry few who can be packed in beside the agents and journalists on a single evening; we mean honest-to-God theatergoers, those who begin to drift in about two weeks, or two months, or even (if someone's prayers have been answered) two years later. All of these folk, early or late, arrive at the box office with two strong possibilities in store for them. One is that the performers, with the initial nerve-crisis past, have perked up or calmed down, whichever is better, some may even have read their notices and believed them just enough (not entirely, miod you, just enough) to enlarge or temper their effects on purpose. In any case, and for a thousand other reasons I ean't go into now, it's a different show. The other possibility is that the devoted playgoer will arrive at the box office to find it closed, the baodwriting having been writ large and early on the wall. In that case, of course, the audience never sees the show at all.

Thus my season isn't a bit like yours. For instance, when I cast memory's eye over this particular season, one of my most tantalizing impressions will be of seeing three of our finest black actors back to back in the same play. In the same jail cell, as it happens. Somewhere along about mid-seasoo (hard to remember, isn't it?) a play called "The Poison Tree" opened on Broadway. In it, Cleavon Little, Dick Anthony Williams and Moses Gunn appeared among the incarcerated, pacing the constricted space between their bunks like philosophical panthers brooding on the peculiar nature of justice. Mr. Williams, cynic, laughed at his plight, though only with his shoulders; eyes and voice were held in steely reserve. Mr. Little cheerfully surrendered all thoughts of revenge; his glee was focused on a revolution to come, some day. And Mr. Gunn, 20 years in stir with only three to go, shuffled about doing the bidding of a white guard more corrupt than any of his charges; he could afford to be called "an imitation Aunt Jemima" with precious liberty so near. Waste effort. Ordered to do blackmail if he wanted to preserve his prison record, he found himself morally obligated to do murder instead. Sending his companions, for safety, off to the basketball court, he put his powerful hands to a deserving victim's throat, and, alone on stage, let loose a litany of cries ("The man gave me no choice," "All that screamin' and nobody listenin'") that lifted the evening light-miles above its so familiar setting and patterns. A superb final five minutes, death and despair made lyrical in Mr. Gunn's mighty cadences, culminating in the hopeless "I'm going to sit here and maybe come up with something in one thousand years." But the play proper was loosely focused, and didn't last beyond a few days. Leaving it rattling around in my head, but not yours.

Some of you, not too many, may have caught a delicately formed, vulnerable, perennial ingenue named Pamela Payton-Wright in an intriguing spot of fantasy called "Jesse and the Bandit Queen" down at Joseph Papp's-Public Theater. It stayed quite a loog while, though not with Miss Payton-Wright, Soon after its opening, the actress was whisked away uptown to Circle in the Square, there to play the delicately formed, vulnerable, eternal ingenue of "The Glass Menagerie." She was of course quite right for it. But do you know what? She was much much more interesting as the notorious Belle Starr,

We had the feeling that the time was right." Twenty years was a sturdy anniversary hook, he said. Besides. Broadway was proving receptive to revivals of late, and a whole generation of theatergoers had never seen "My Fair Lady" in any form. Robert Coote, the original Col. Pickering, was found alive and well and on tour in Australia, where be was persuaded to take on the part once again. Finding an Eliza was another matter.

The great Eliza hunt re-

Jerry Adler recalls, "and by November we had a couple of good prospecta. Christine, who was one of them, had worked with me when I did Words and Music.' CBS stepped up to the table again, plunking down $500,-000 for another bet on its lucky old number. There are 12 other investors. The show is costing $750,000, or about twice as much as it did in 1956. Adler thinks that figure is "amazingly low for a show like this, which has to be fairly opulent to live up to people's memories of it. But, you see, we're not making any mistakes, because we've been there before. We know what the problems are before we begin. We know our needs, right down to the last reaction was that it would hat, glove and flower. We know the cost in terms of orchestration. There's no waste, and waste is what kills you. I think if you tried to bring in My Fair Lady now, from scratch, it would run a million and a half to produce." Is this "My Fair Lady" a carbon copy, then? In terms of content and staging, very much so. The book and score are unchanged. Songs like "I Could Have Danced All Night." "Wouldn't It Be Loverly," and "T've Grown Accustomed to Her Face" are all in their accustomed places. The costumes are exactly as before. "We're using Cecil Beaton's original designs, which really can't be improved upon," says Adler. The one exception is Elize's ball gown, which has been modified because Christine Andreas isn't as tall as Julie Andrews. The choreography is the same except that the groupings have been shifted to suit the stage of the St. James, which is shallower than that of the Mark Hellinger, where "My Fair Lady" played for most of its run. The different stage has also influenced Oliver Smith's new set designs, which differ from his originals in their spatial illusions. Only the famous Ascot scene, says Adler, is a virtual carbon of the original.

Where the revival will part company with the original, at least to a degree, is in the area of interpretation. Adler stresses thet it was never his intention to mold his new stars into copies of their predecessors, "You can't, really," he says. These are different people, with their own strengths. Rex was such an idiosyncratie actor, so special. He played Higgins as a great egoist, a very eccantric and charming rascal. Ian's interpretation is more of a scientist in love with his work and his thesis. Rex had a great kind of sexuality that colored the Higgins/Eliza relationship in a sexily romantic way. With Ian and Christine, it's still romantic, but in a more mature way. Rex never told us how he worked: he was an instinctive actor. Ian's approach is more intellectual and so is Christine's. whereas Julie played Eliza very subjectively. It's a stronger relationship

"almost a suicidal idea" to take on e role that had become synonymous with Rex Harrison, and who took six months to make up his mind about doing it, is enjoying himself immensely. He likes doing Shaw as a change from Shakespeare, and he finds that the musical form has its own challenges. "I can actually sing, you know." said Richardson, in the sonorous voice that is his only dramatic feature. The actor was limbering up in his dressing room before joining the others at rehearsal, "But I'va discovered that if you sing Higgins's songs, with the possible exception of Tve Grown Accustomed to Her Face,' you lose the vitality and the reverserative qualities of the character. My first idea of the role was to sing a hell of a lot more of it than my predecessor did, but it is not written to be sungexcept in specific pleces. In overlyricizing, you lose the

"Any comparison between me and Rex Harrison is a negative kind of question," he went on. "It's superfluous. I realized before I started rebearsale that there migot be a tendency from the directorial side to make me do what Harrison old, but instead, Adler has tapped aspects of my personality. The most difficult thing is to have the necessary irascibility, hut at the same time to bave charm. Harrison had that in abundance. Actually," said, smiling, "I'm told I was quite charming at yesterday's rehearsal."

For Christine Andreas, who was a 4-year-old in Camden, N.J., when Julie Andrews captivated Broadway as the "draggle-tailed guttersnipe" Eliza, the pressure is very "It really hit me when real. stretches back over two centuries to Jean - Georges Noverre the city's first superstar ballet master.

Fifteen years ago, the Stutteart company was under the direction of Nicholas Beriosoff, no mean talent himself, but not the man Württemberg State Theater's Walter Ericb Schäfer felt was right for the project he had in mind—to make what was essentially an opera house ballet into an independent company. In January, 1961. Schäfer brought John Cranko, the Royal Ballet choreographer, to Stuttgart. We knew we had a talentchoreographer." says Schäfer, "but who could tell if he had the organizational genius necessary to build and run a full-scale company?" The issue remained in doubt slow in coming: "Eugene "Carmen," Taming of the Shrew," classics such as "Giselle" and "Swan Lake," and surprisingly modern excursions such as "Presence" and the tour de force for star dancers Cragun, Birgit Keil, Haydee and Madsen, "Initials-R.B.M.E." (standing for the dancers' first names).

And suddenly it was over. Returning by plane from tha company's third American tour on June 26, 1973, the 46-year-old John Cranko died during the flight.

"We were a family and our father had died," recalls California born solo dancer Richard Cragun. "Our first reaction was just to stop everything." Then, as now, Marcia Haydée-all five feet, three inches of her-was a tower of strength in rallying tba company. With Administrative Director Dieter Gräfe, Tetley: 'Handling such a large company was restricting me more and more as a choreographer.'

ail that spring while Cranko hired and fired dancers until he was ready with an ensemble and a premiere for the fall season. "He got Haydée from the Cuevas corps, Ricbard Cragun was already bere in the company, and Egon Madsen came early too," recalls Schäfer. 'The premiere ballet was the Prokofiev 'Romeo and Juliet,' and we knew then and there that we had found our geniusand it wasn't long before ali Europe knew it."

The company's first New York appearance in the spring of 1969 confirmed that Cranko and the Stuttgart Ballet were, in the words of Time magazine, "moving swiftly ahead on the Autobahn to glory." The triumphs were not she journeyed to Spoleto, where Glen Tetley owns a 12th-century tower in an olive grove.

The soft-spoken Tetley had worked with Cranko in Stuttgart during the early 1970's. He recalls: "Wheo Marcia came to me she said, 'You're the one we want. We believe in you and we know we can create with you. Wa don't want to be a company without an artistic head, a creative center.' And that's when

I decided to go with them." He become director of the Stuttgart Ballet in Scptember, 1974. The immediate reaction of some critics to Tetley, the champion of contemporary dance, was to imagine that he was turning the company away from the hallowed Cranko tradition and leading it ioto the controlled anarchy which characterized avant-garde music.

The company disagreed with that view. "Through Glen we were introduced to a completely new school of dancing, a form of movement we just didn't know," says Richard Cragun. "Releases, contractions, rollovers, failbacks and high releases all came in with Glen-a whole new vocabulary of movements we had never known before and which were very demandiog.'

Nonetheless, in January of last year, under the leaderof Heinz-Ludwig Schneiders, ballet critic of the Stuttgart Nachrichten, the Joho Cranko Society was formed, "We felt we had to do something," says Schneiders, "since Cranko's work was no longer being cultivated by Tetley. It seemed as if only Tetley ballets were being dona regularly and Cranko's very sel-

Schneiders admits that he never even thought Tetley was a good choreographer, let alone an adequate director: "Tetley wanted to make a classical company into a modern dance company which would bave been a catastrophe for Stuttgart. He had to go." Administrative Director

Dieter Gräfe dismisses the John Cranko Society as "just a fan club with no influence." But clearly, the group was no belp to Tetley in his efforts to follow Stuttgart's biggest act in 200 years.

Problams began to appear within the company. too. Tetley's ballets tended to use soloists in a way that didn't build them as solo performers in the minds of the public, and many compadancers felt they were not being used enough. "With 60 dancers, it's hard to keep everyone happy," says Marcia Haydée. "Most of Glen's bailets used small casts, which meant that 40 or so dancers had nothing to do-not that was aware of the problem: "I've been a dancer most of my life, and I'm right with them every step, but handling such a large company is a problem for any administrator. Everyone shouldand must-dance, but I could see this was constricting me more and more as a choreographer."

For Tetley, maintaining his artistic freedom as a choreographer became increasingly difficult as the pressures from hostile critics rose. The last straw was when the Stuttgart Theater administration - bending, be believes, to outside pressures - attempted to dictata artistic policy by insisting that tha company's next performance include at least one classical hallet. Ha announced his resignation as of the end of the current season in July.

Despite all the recent troubles, the Stuttgart Ballet, a lively corpse, is proceeding with plans for several new productions. This spring, Tetley will do a new "Sacre." and next season a ballet based on Sartre's "Infernal Machine." In addition, there are contracts for new ballets with Kenneth MacMillan, John Neumeier and Jiri Kylian. MacMillan will do a completely new "Anastasia" next year with Japanese music and will revisa a version of "Miss Julie" he did with the company three years ago. Neumeier is scheduled to do "Anthony and Cleopatra" in 1978, and Kylian is choreographing a pas de deux this season, In addition, the company is planning a new 'Sleeping Beauty.'

"The future is exciting in every respect," says Richard Cragun, "There's also an element of risk. You always take a risk when you flybut it's worth it to be able

Now 73, Spiegel represents one of the last of a dying breed-the "creative" producer who oversees every detail of his films. Although he insists that he does not see himself as the "last tycooo" of Fitzgerald's novel, the film grew out of his desire to say something about the changes in Holly wood since he first started out in the husmess. "I had thought for a long time," he says, "of making a film about a period when picture making was really a matter of life and death for people here. The moviemakers of the 30'e and 40's carried a certain magie that I don't feel exists today. Today there is all this preoccupation with violence and cheap sensationalism. It's probably the impact of television, but now people don't look upon a movie as something that will last. In those days prople thought that classical moviemaking would loog survive the makers themselves, and > Pinter spent a year, and a half on the script—the longest time he had ever devoted to a movie, according to Spiegel, a perfectiooist noted for the demands he makes on writers. "I resent when people say that a producer just takes care of the financing on a movie," Spiegel snaps. "I am much more deeply involved than that." After Pinter had completed his first draft, for example, the two spent a month conferring oo the script. "We made copious changes," Spiegel says, "and Pinter rewrote the script three or four times. In the novel and in Pinter's first draft. Kathleen was introduced rather late. I argued that we had to introduce the first seeds of the love story much earlier."

I wanted to hring back some nostalgia for that period."

Other changes from novel to film include the elimination of Fitzgerald's opening chapter, which lovolves a cross-country plane trip and a Visit to Andrew Jacksoo's home in Nashville, "The film would have been overlong with that opening," Spiegel argues. "It seemed extraneous. Besides, we decided the film would have greater dramatic unity if it began in Hollywood and ended in Hollywood."

The major change, however, was the addition of an ending to the unfinished novel. "Edmund Wilson put together a summary of the rest of the oovel from scraps of papers that Fitzgerald had left," says Spiegel, "hut I don't believe any of them would have really been incorporated into the book if Fitzgerald had lived. We tried to limit the script to tha six chapters he had writteo, and find the cooclusion almost immediately after the sixth chapter. This way you remain faithful to the spirit, if not to the entire text, of the book."

At first Spiegel hired Mike Nichola to direct "The Last

Theo the producer contacted his old frieod Kazan. "The reason I didn't go to Kazan first," Spiegel explains, "was that he was so totally in-volved in writing covels. They were quite good, though in my opioion he will oever he as good a novalist as he is a director. Kazan can get more out of ao actor than any director I've ever worked with. There were directors who were more fluent with camera or more fluent with cutting. But I don't know a director who is as skillful at releasing an actor of his inhibitions."

Although Spiegel does not spend much time on the set, he watches rushes every morning of the preceding day's work, and sometimes he asks for reshooting. "I would say that 90 percent of what Kazan does exceeds my expectations." says Spiegel, "and the rest of it almost lives up. Sometimes an expression on the actor's face in close-up is not quite right, so we have done some re-

On the set the 66-year-old Kazan is in high spirits, obviously savoring his return to moviemaking. "This is like a very strenuous vacation for me," he says. "I doo't have to confront myself every day, as I do wheo I'm writing. On a film there is a marvelous comradely feeling. You have all kinds of superior help." Kazan has suffered some major setbacks during the last decade; his novels have sold well, hut they have oot always heen favorably reviewed, and his last two films -"The Arrangement" and a low-budget effort, "The Visitors"-were critical and commercial failures. His latest novel. "The Understudy," a harsh study of an aging actor, once a matinee idol but now destitute and forgotten, seems to reflect Kazan's own feelings about the fickleoess of the financiers, the public and the critics. He insists, however, that the character was not meaot as a self-por-

I'll never forget seeing Bill Inge when he was here in L.A., disconsolate and fat, disgusted with himself, hiding and sneaking around. Later he committed suicide. All three of them were cruelly rejected. You can't depend on the critics and the public. Your own self-respect is most important. There's a line in 'The Uoderstudy' when the main character says, trick is not to survive, but to survive as yourself.' I think I have. I'm the same person I always was."

Kazan does not entirely share Splegel's costalgia for the old Hollywood, but he agrees that today's studio tycoons are less charismatic than those of Monroe Stanr's generation. "Those old fellows had a great deal of personal vanity, and vanity is a very creative force in the arts. Guys like Goldwyn and Zanuck and all those monsters bad one thing in common-when the film had their name on it, it had to be the best thing out that year. Spiegel is the eame way. He's an obsessed man. I don't see that aort of commitment in the heads of studios .today. When I meet them, they seem more like ageots, husinessmen, and

The third important member of the creative triumvirate is Robert De Niro, who came to "The Last Tycoon" after completing the role of the psychotic loner in "Taxi

Driver." "Bobby has never played an executive, he's never played an intellectual. he's never played a lover,' says Kazan. "I had to find that side of him; it was unexplored territory." To prepare for the role of Monroe Stahr. De Niro found out all that he could about Thalberg. 'De Niro is very much like Thalberg," says Ray Milland, "very meek, very quiet, very thin." And, adds Kazan, "He's getting thinner and thinner. I'm worried abou; him, Thalberg, on whom this is vaguely hased. had a rheumatic heart and was very frail. Bobby went to the greatest lengths to get that, I admire how thorough he is."

De Niro, like Kazan and Spiegel, sees Stahr as a very unconventional tycooo. "The interesting thing about him is that he's able to combine he artistic side of movies with the husiness side. Usually they're m conflict." He liked the script. "The dialogue is very spare. Harold Pinter himself has the constraint that wo keep talking about in reference to the character of Stahr. Kazan has more feeling; he's more Mediterranean. He's always trying to play egainst Pin-ter's restraint. I think that makes for an interesting ten-

Most of the people involved with 'Tha Last Tycoon' are seasoned protessionals, but the success of the film may depend on a delicately beautiful newcomer from England named Ingrid Boulting, Since the love story of Stahr and Kathleen is the emotional center of the movie, the rapport between De Niro and Boulting is crucial. With a hudget of $5.5-million, why did the filmmakers decide to gamble on an unknown actress? "We have so many well-known actors that we felt we could afford bringing in two new names," explains Spiegel, who also cast newcomer Theresa Russell in a major role. "I've done this before. I started the most expensive picture I ever made - 'Lawrence of Arabia' --with two complete wi-knowns. Peter O'Toole and Omar Sharif. If you can succeed with two men, why oot with two girls? Pesides, there is a tremendous sbortage of young femintoe talent today. There hasn't been an important oew actress discovered since Julie Christie. So we thought maybe we could create a new star." Of all the performers in "The Last Tyccon," the only one who was actually in Hollywood in 1938—the year the story is set-is Ray Milland, wbo plays Fleishacker, the studio lawyer and hatchet man, and he remembers the real-life principals. He met Fitzgerald at Joan Crawford's house, worked briefly at MGM for Traiberg, and played golf with Eddie Mannix, Louis B. Mayer's aide and the model for the character of Stahr's rival, Brady (played hy Robert Mitchum in the movie).

"Working on this film does make me nostalgic," Milland says. "We had a hell of a good time. Hollywood was a warm, colorful, exciting place in those days. Stars looked like stars, and dressed like stars. They had wooderful, glamorous supper clubs. The Cocoanut Grove, the Trocadero, Ciro's. A movie premiere was a thrilling event. Of course we were all much younger."

If Miliand allows himself a momeot of reverie, he is hard-headed in his view of the movie business, willing to play much smaller parts than the ones he used to play. "My philosophy is do what you can with what you've got. I know actors from my generation who sit at home and cry. "Why don't they send me any scripts?" I tell them, 'Because you still think of yourself as a leading man. You're 68, not 28. Face it."

study of survival in Hollywood: the real-life dramas of the people making the movie are inextricably bound up with the story that Fitzgerald wrote. The filmmakers hava aurreodered to Fitzgerald's romantic vision of lost Hollywood grandeur, and for the moment seem to have forgotten the more painful and prosaic truths about the past. "In our memories," says Spiegel, 'things loom much larger and much better than they really were."

Any one of these films seen separately might seem innocent enough, hut seen altogether they begio to shape up as propaganda, carefully calculated to give the public the kind of escapism it wants, while calling for a return to the old laissez-faire economy where a man was free to be as paternal as he wanted to people (animals) less fortunate then himself. The true rigors of wilderness existence are oever emphasized, while the iovs of mao-beast relationships are rather overstated.

In an article in the Village Voice Feb. 23, J. Hoberman reported at some length on the elaborate methods employed by Sun Classic Pictures, described as "a part of the right-wing Schick conglomerate" and the producers of "Grizzly Adams" and "Brother of The Wiod," to research the market before putting any of its films into release. I would suspect that much more money is speot in hard-sell promotion of these films than is ever spent in making them. There is oothing wrong in that except that the films are so technically tacky one would wish a little more had been spent on production. It just may be, however, that the patrons who turned "Grizzly Adams" into one of the biggest box-office hits last year may have heen hrainwashed by market research without knowing it. I wooder, too, if they realize that the films' romantic notions about wilderness life are actually the fantasies of people with a very particular political message to sell. Political liberals, so often credited as running Hollywood, seldom get their messages across so loud and clear—and so profitably.

Patrick Wayne hears the call of the wild in "The Bears and I."

Debating 'Barry' And 'Beauties'

To the Editor:

In his article, 'Notes on Seeing Barry Lyndon" (Feb. 29), Harold Rosenberg Rosenberg equates information with cul-

According to Mr. Roseo berg, "Moving pictures are not a good vehicle for original ideas," and yet he would have them take pieces of literature — every one of which lives because of its originality and individuality and interpret them for the public, so that people may have a glib, superficial knowledge of our literary beritage which will then pass as cultivation in this competitive world. The voice of the true creator is not beard; the movie director's voice is. What is presented on film is the husk; the kernel has been lost. The Thackeray, the Eliot, the Dickens bas been trod upon.

What Mr. Rosenberg is saying is let the media do your thinking for you and tell you what is worth "knowing" so that you may pass as a "cultured" person. NANCY B. SCOTT Annapolis, Md.

To tha Editor: Jerzy Kosinski's review of

"Seven Beauties" ("A Cartoon Trying to Be a Tragedy." March 7) completely missed tha vision of the world that Lina Wertmuller succeeded in presenting. Miss Wertmuller is no

"trying to pass off a shell as a viable character." Quite the cootrary, Pasqualino is not a character, or a hero, or a tragic person. He is an everyman-one of the masses who follows crowds and traditions, does what is expedient, has few ideas of ideals, rarely questions, lacks insights into himself and others, and fervently believes that what he feels to be the truth at a given moment is truth. He survives and is probably representative of 95 percent of the population of the world.

Miss Wertmuller's point is that life is degrading, burnliating, grim, and irrattonal. Most people don't learn from their own mistakes, or the mistakes of others. Lewenthal—he knows where to look.

Milhaud pieces are not as good as Gottschalk's), the music itself has a great deal to offer. The minor figures set the big ones into better perspective. These minor figures, too, often have a surprising degree of individuality-much more so than their corresponding brethren of the baroque period.

Another aspect of the revival is of extreme value, and it has to do with performance practice. Thanks to a combination of factors, many of the traditions of romantic performance practice have been forgotten. The result has, in some cases, been sheer desperation. Sensitive young artists know that there is something in the music-in its rubato, its agogies, its structure, its coocept of sound—that the notes on the printed page cannot reveal. So they fiail around, indulging io wild exaggerations under the impression that this is "romantic" playing. Or they retreat ioto the equally wrong practice of strict bteralism.

What they have to learn, and what the romantic revival may help them learn, is that romantic performance practice as measured by its greatest exponents is a cootrolled, aristocratic, even classic style. In the piano playing of Hofmann, Rachmaninoff, Lhevinne and other giants of the period, the legendary "romanticisms" are almost always confined to ritard effects that bridge contrasting sections, and to inner voices that are brought out because the composer has clearly indicated that he wants them brought out. In the violin playing of Sarasate (which can be studied on is none of the tugging and hauling that so many youogsters conceive of as romantic style.

Thus if nothing else, the romantic revival can help young musicians play their Chopin, Schumann, Brahms and yeslate Beethoven in a much more authentic manner than they do at present. Rehearing music of the 19th century in performances that approximate the practices of the time may come as a shock to some of the old-mald musicians and critics who have dominated ideas about performance up to now. It's high time they were shook up.

At a time when popular singers like Cleo Laine and Barbra Streisand are venturing into the classical music field, two classically trained musicians - Joan Morris, mezzo-soprano, and William Bolcom, pianist and composer -are travelling in the opposite direction, making a considerable name for themselves rediscovering the pop-

TIGE TELL For nearly four years now, the team of Morris and Bolcom has been touring the country with their curious program of ragtime and popular songs from the Gay '90's to the 1930's. But only in the last couple of years the two have become familiar outside of places like Ann Arbor, where Bolcom teaches music composition at the University of Michigan, and acores of other college towns between New York and Seattle.

Their newfound popularity coincided with the release of their first joint album for Nonesuch, "After the Ball." Billed as a collection of American turn-of-the-century popular songs, it featured Solcom at the piano and Miss Morris performing such memorable ditties as "A Bird in a Gilded Cage," "Wait 'til the Sun Shines Nellie" and, of course, the title song.

To the surprise of everyooe, the album awakened critical adjectives ("wholly captivating," said The New Yorker) and became something of a hit by classical record standards.

The two made the cover of Billboard Magazine and performed at Carnegie Hall, the Smithsonian Institution, the Boston Pops and at Wolf Trap. Next Saturday they'll be appearing at Alice Tully Hall in a recital of popular songs by American composers from Charles Harris (of "After the Ball" fame) to Gershwin. An added attraction will be the appearance by 93-year-old Eubie Blake, who, with Noble Sissie, composed such works as "I'm Just Wild about Harry," "Lovin' You the Way 1 Do" and "Shuffle Along."

The New York recital is just one of seven the pair will be performing in the month of March. Usually they average two concerts a month, which allowa Bolcom the time to fulfill his academic responsibilities in Ann Arbor and to compose music.

At home in Ann Arbor, the two live in a cottage on a wooded acre where arugula grows wild. The ocarest building in sight is a red harn down the road. The 32-yearold Miss Morris keeps busy while Bolcom teaches by giving her own private course in the American popular song.

Born in Portland, Oregon, Miss Morris attended Gonzaga University on a voice scholarship hut quit after two years. Traveling east hy Greyhound, she landed in New York City as a starstruck kid and checked into the Y

For two years she toured with a group called the Whit/ Lo Singers, which performed a repertoire evenly divided between classical and pop ("Poulenc and 'Age of Aquarius," Miss Morris recalls). Then she joined the cast of an off-Broadway production of "The Drunkard" where she met a harpist by the name of Jay Miller. One day during the summer Miller dumped his harp into a baby carriage and he and Miss Morris wheeled it into Central Park. "I sang a song," Miss Morris recalled, "and someone handed me a dollar. A friend who played the organ at St. Patrick's pinched a collection basket for us and Jay and I would take it with us to the park. We'd make $45 to $50

They did this for two summers, then moved up to The Monster, a Fire Island bar. There they were "discovered" by the manager of the Carlyle Hotel who offered them $10 a day to perform at the exclusive Manhattan hotel. Their next stop was the Peacock Alley at the Waldorf

Meanwhile, the 38-year-old Seattle-born Bolcom was "All it means," Bolcom exgrinding out works of various plains, "is that you say 'ain't' making sure the diphthong kinds from his one-room garret on Christopher Street in is properly placed." Eventually, Miss Morris added a wardrobe to complement the period songs, including a lavish cape made of peacock feathers and sequins and lined in purple satin: "Music should be a physical and mental thiog, and the costumes put me In the mood, I wear a corsei, too, It gives you that hig shelf," Miss Morris adds, arching her back for emphasis.

"Everything gets pushed up."
"My God." interjects Bolcom, "it takes her an hour just to get dressed. Layers and layers of underwear." Miss Morris rejects camp

"The songs are "I couldn't see spoiling a real and I sing them straight. perfectly good relationship don't impose a style on by working with her," adds them. To me, the song is more important than the Bolcom. "But I finally went singer." to hear her at the Waldorf."

"Not long ago," Bolcom com's at Brooklyn College, confided, "a record company approached Joanie about doing some big production. They wanted to remake her. You know, straighten her teeth and hair and put a huge orchestra behind her. Turn her into another Barbra Streisand, But that's all style and very little music. Our songs are best with just piano accompaniment. They need the intimacy." Last year, the two produced their second Nonesuch album (with Clifford Jackson. Miss Morris's teacher), "Who Shall Rule this American Nation," a collection of Civil War-era songs by Henry Clay Work. Miss Morris discovered the songs while thumbing through the card catalogue of the University of Michigan library in search of the score of Kurt Weill's "Seveo Deadly Sins."

"I saw something called 'Work-songs,'" she recalls. "I thought they had to do with the New Deal. 1 got them out and looked them over. He wrote stuff like 'Buckskin Bag of Gold' and 'Grandfather's Clock.' We fell in love with them."

Less than four mooths ago, the twice married and divorced Bolcom was wed to his companion of four years, Joan Morris. "It was a little awkward out in Ann . Arbor," Miss Morris now confesses. "I wasn't a facul- . ty wife. I guess I was a faculty mistress."

Marriage, a house in Ann -Arbor, a pied-a terre of sorts : in Manhattan, concerts, recordings, teaching. Is life as : idyllic as it sounds?

"We haven't made a cent," _ says Bolcom. "People think that musicians earn large royalties from their records hut it just isn't true-only pop stars who sell in the millions get rich on making are paid back on our concert dates, we're sometimes in the hole. We're famous and broke."

"Hey, wait a minute." says Miss Morris. "Who said we were famous?"

Sessions says the opera is expensive to produce, "not because I want it to be but because it needs a big cast and a big orchestra." The opera must convey a message." "Ashmedai," with a libretto by Israel Eliraz, is based on a Talmudic legend whose message seems clear. The title character is a personification of Saten, who tricks the populace into driving King Solomon from his throne, leaving Ashmedai free to impersonate the king and take over the country. "He leaves the people," says Tal. "in a state of complete spiritual and material ruin As in most of my operas. there is no real ending. "Ines de Castro"

Thomas Pasatieri (whose career is discussed by Peter G. Davis in today's Magazine section) points out that the story of Ines de Castro, which originates in Portugal is known in a number of European literatures but has never been dealt with in our own. It is a 14th-century tale of the love of a Portuguese prince for his wife's cousin, who bears him two children. After her murder by the court, the prince fights his way to power. In what promises to be one of the more hair-raising finales on stage this spring he exhumes the body and—in keeping with an old yow-crowns It Oueen. "It is such a great, great love story, and I go much further in the romantic tradition than in 'The Seagull,' which was a more intimate story [the Chekov-based opera was produced in Houston in 1974]. An article devoted to Speculum Musicae in the music pages of the Sunday Times, Fabruary 22, was accompanied by a photograph of the group and with a large caption in the form of a quote from the article stating that "At Juilliard, contemporary music was considered non-music."

The quotation, attributed to a clarinetist in the group, Virgil Blackwell, does not indicata when contemporary music was considered nonmusic. In any case, the statement is not based on fact. Mr. Blackwell entered Juilliard in 1964. In his first year as a studeot, the School presented the Uoited States premiere of Hans Werner Henze's "Elegy for Young Lovers." For its public coocerts that season there were compositions by Diamond, Varèse, Britten, Ginastera, Giannini, Copland, Schuller, Surinach, Frank Martin, Mennin, Toca, Honegger, Persichetti, Dello Joio, Thomas Pasatieri, Kirchner, Hovhannes and Carman Moore, among others. Often the composers were present. Teaching on the faculty at that time were Luciano Berio, with performances of his new pieces; Hugo Weisgall, Vincent Persichetti, Robert Starer, Jacob Druckman, Vittorio Giannini and Artbur Weisberg, amoog others. - The following year there were the New York premieres of new opera: Hugo Weisgall's "Purgatory" and Roger Sessions' "The Trial of Lucullus." There were concert works by Piston, Thomson, Hugh Aitken, Janácek, Hindemith, Dallapiccola, Aivin Etler. Lou Harrison, Robert Ward, and Samuel Barber.

The oumber of commissions for new works mada possible

by Juilliard (Carter's Third

String Quartet, Berio's "Pray-

Sessions' "Double Concerto," the Quartet Concerto of Ulysses Kay, George Rochberg's Third Symphocy, among others) and the number of premieres by major and less well-known composers embraces many styles and nationalities. George Crumb's now popular "Echoes of Time and the River' had its New York premiere by the Juilliard Orchestra with the composer present; Peter Maxwell Davies' "Versalii Icones" was given lts U.S. premiere at the School There have been new works by Pousseur, Reimann, Knussen, Searle, Alsina, Stockhausen, Brant, Ruth Crawford, Earle Brown, Albright and Conyngbarn, and new operas by Virgil Thomson, Harold Farberman and Hall Overton.

Aimost all of the members of Speculum Musicae are graduates of the School and have received scholarships and numerous prizes. Juilliard is pleased not only with what they have accomolished as an ensemble but that they return individually for visits with teachers, to rehearse and to perform from time to time with the Philharmonic and in the School's own 20th Century Music series under the direction of Richard Dufallo.

As Ziggy Stardust in 1972, Bowie became King of Glitter.

In posaession of a nasal-edged, potent tenor with a pleading vibrato, Bowie, a natural actor, bas always been able to infuse his cryptic lyrics with conviction. His audience knows that he is "the thin white duke" wbo has returned to supply them with a series of magical, dreamlike moments. These moments are enhanced by the stark design of the show, all overhead fluorescent lamps and crisscrossing spots which provide sharp, harsh conceotrated doses of white light. Bowie performs this new role, with

This latest image is very different from the ona the English rock star projected four years ago when he was introduced to the American public as 1972's Ultimate Novelty—a strikingly bandsome young man with milkywhite skin, luminous blue eyes and bair dyed a shockiog orange. Bowie gleefully discussed with interviewers the joys of being a busband, a father, a rock star and bisexual. He also stated that the world would end in a frenzied holocaust withthe next five years only to be reborn with wave-ofthe-future types like himself at the helm.

To his earliest fans, Bowie was "Ziggy Stardust," the protagonist of his fourth LP,

"The Rise and Fall of Ziggy Stardust and the Spiders from Mars." Ziggy was a rock star who wore makeup, called himself "Lady Stardust," sang songs of "darkness and disgrace" and eventually wasted away as time and age overcame him. Bowie's "Ziggy" songs linked inoffensive melodies to knotty sci-fi lyrics. These lyrics conjured up a set of dehumanized creatures with "space faces" and "electric eyes" who swallowed "protein pills" and daydreamed 'moonage daydreams." In most part, Bowie's attempt at stage characterization appeared not so much as an example of wave-of-the-future rock theatrics but as a low-budget rewrite of Stanley Kubrick's "2001." Yet it was on this basis that be became the "King of Glitter Rock."

Local bands everywhere began to feature young male rock musicians in outlandish. androgynous costumes who spent more time rouging their cheeks and tinting their hair than perfecting their mu-

Glitter-rockers by the score turned out to see Bowie during his 1974 spring, summer, and fall tour. With lightning streaks painted on their faces and glitter patches pasted on their foreheads, these fans undoubtedly expected another go around with Ziggy Stardust. Bowie aurprised them. He staged a full-blown de monstration of rock-theater. whose source was his then current seventh LP, "Diamond Dogs." The theme of this evening was future decay. At a cost of $200,000, Bowie and light-ing designer Jules Fisher set about creating "Hunger City," the locale mentioned in "Diamond Dogs," a city-scape comprised of 33-foothigh towers designed to resemble crumbling skyscrapers that dripped slag as if it were blood. With two male dancers as sidekicks. Bowie stepped through this grim environment in the role of an icy, distant tour guide. The show consisted of 20 of his songs which he sang, danced and acted with tha polished dispatch of someone who bad spent his entire life in the musical theater. Each of these mini-production numbers—with Bowie at their center-had been tightly choreographed and staged; each contributed to the overall effect-a series of swirling musical and visual images of a seared, bombed-out urban wasteland of the fuso many other figures from both the worlds of Broadway and rock had failed. Rock purists, however, protested that Bowie was turning rock into a Las Vegas-style revue. But a new Bowie was still to come. At the end of this tour he returned to New York City, where he had already performed his "Diamond Dogs" show in Madison Square Garden, to play Radio City Music Hall. He had no sceoery with him this time, and he had traded in his dancers for a black rhythmand-blues back-up chorus. Bowie took to the Music Hall stage to rasp, shout, croon and roar his way through a soul version of his songbook. There he also introduced material from his new extraordinary Bowie's shifts have enabled him to build up a catalogue of material that contains rockers, space songs, theater soogs, rbythm-and-blues songs as well as two disco hits. And the "simplistics" that he will put on display this week reveal the most successful example of each form. Robert Hilburn, reviewing the new "basic" Bowie in The Los Angeles Times, described him as a continental cabaret performer who remains "rock's most charismatic and pop music's most potentially ex-

orman Lear was in New York recently, demonstrating once again that be is one of the more fascinating figures oo the current entertainment scene. The producer is connected, in varying degrees, with an extraordinary array of TV series: "All in the Family," "Maude," "Sanford "The Jeffersons," "Good Times," "Ooe Day at a Time," "The Dumplings" and, on the syndicated circuit, "Mary Hartman, Mary Hartman." Has such unorecedented success spoiled Norman Lear? The answer would depend evidently, on which part of the man you choose, or are

The public Lear persona is as lovable as a warm puppy, to speak, gently bubbling with testimonials to his children or recently read books or the innate intelligence of the American public. But, in person, his eyes are constantly reflecting the split-secood shrewdness and cold calculation that would seem essential for any degree of success in the mad, mad world of the television business. In an interview with Barbara Cady, published in the March issue of Playboy magazine, Mr. Lear is almost lyrical in declaring "my faith in the wisdom and maturity of the American people." Yet, throughout the plece, his favorite imagery is derived from some form of excrement, human

He recalls, for instance, that his salesman father once boasted that he could put said commodity on a stick and sell it for lollipops. The producer adds, "That's what convinced me to spend my life giving people real lollipops." The article ends with Lear telling the story of the twin frolicking in the stuff. His brother, placed by a psychologist in a separate but similar room, stands in the corner holding his nose. The more exuberant brother, having a fantastic time, explains to the doctor that "if there's a room full of it, there's got to he a pony in here someplace." Mr. Lear feels the anecdote says something about optimism and pessimism. It may say more about the current state of popular entertainment.

Mr. Lear is currently battling the networks over, among other things, the concept of the "family hour" in the early portion of prime time. He argues that the vague restrictions against unnecessary violence and sexual themes violate the First Amendment rights of the entertainment creators. Prior to a recent appearance oo the Gabe Pressman show on Channel 5, Mr. Lear was explicit with this writer oo why he thinks the networks are being hypocritical on this issue. While their standards-and-practices departments are wortying about "objectionable" material, he argued, the programming people are intentionally sensationalizing good scripts with gimmicks such as car crashes and burning bodies in an effort to grab the attention of larger audiences.

Mr. Lear's crusade is complex, riddled with considerations of hard cash in the eventual re-sale markets, as well as with the tonier issues of creativity. For the momeot, though, he may be facing more pressing problems within the walls of his own factory. Although perhaps only temporarily, the Lear product bas become noticeably strained. A good deal of the humor has settled into a monotonous groove of hostility. The situations, psrticularly those dealing with sex, are getting predictable enough to trigger charges of easy exploitation.

"One Day at a Time" Is getting healthy ratings on CBS where it follows the vastly superior "M. A. S. H" on Wednesdays at 9:30. Despite a good cast and a promising premise-a divorced woman attempting to raise two teenage daughters-the series has been generally mediocre. The character of the older daughter, something of a hysterical brat, is positively repulsive. Mr. Lear counters that any strong reaction to a TV character msy be worthwhile.

Possibly, but not when the reaction is strong enough to get the TV set turned off.

"The Dumplings," on NBC Wednesdays at 9:30, is not getting good ratings. It doeso't deserve good ratings. Interestingly, Mr. and Mrs. Dumpling, characters taken from a Canadian comic strip, are just about the only couple in a Lear productioo who do not use hostile humor on each other. They are "uncomplicated and so much in love," according to Mr. Lear. "In the face of all odds," he told Miss Cady, "they've managed somehow to keep their innocence and their optimism."

But, evidently a price must be paid for innocence and optimism. For the Dumplings (played by James Coco and Geraldine Brooks) it is fat. Both he and she are militantly: overweight, swooning at the mention of just about any cholesterol-laden food dish. They adore each other's girth, of course, but the message still is that fst is fundy. Even the fortunate few who can be described as "so much io love" or "too pure" for the world cannot escape a touch of the grotesque.

"Mary Hartman, Mary Hartman" does indeed represent a fascinating departure for the Lear organization. Brilliantly cast, the ultimate exploration of soap-opera techniques is almost recklessly uneven. Many elemeous, including Louise Lasser's overuse of Mary's blank stare, are tiresome. But some, a quite respectable portion, are insanely funny. A recent funeral service beld in Mary's kitchen for a sports coach who had drowned in a bowl of chicken soup offered 10 minutes of the most hilarious TV that is likely to be seen this year.

Yet, the use or misuse of soap-opera gimmicks for TV comedy would seem to he rather limited. At this stage, Mr. Lear is still forced to confront the problem of new future directions. Will he expand, or will he settle for merely additional products from the same cookie cutter? His record bas been astonishingly inventive. He has transformed TV comedy into s form than can deal with serious personal and social problems. In his warm and lovable persona, he decies that he has been influential. "Bull ----!" he declares with typical modesty. But his shrewdness and cold calculation will undoubtedly keep him fighting for a while.

"Nekui Rosh," a 45-minute, biweekly barrage of fastpaced political satire and buf-Do viewers expect different foonery that is aired bere over the state-subsidized broadcasting network, is not just a television show. It is something between a scandal and a national resource. Members of the Knesset, Israel's parliament-a frequent target of the show's cutting humor-periodically deliver indignant speeches charging it with undermining the nation's morale and demanding that it be taken off the air. Nevertheless, every other Thursday at 10 P.M. no less rope — the Hapsburgs, the than two out of three Israelis, including Prime Minister manovs—during and after Yitzhak Rabin when he ia not otherwise preoccupied, tune in for their "Nikui Rosh" (free translation: "brain wash"), and were they to be deprived of it, there is reason to believe that many would be extremely

They took occasion to express this displeasure recentish English-attributes that ly when "Nikui Rosh" was canceled twice. The cancellations were linked to the Siboni brothers affair, one of a number of domestic issues currently troubling many Israelis who fear that their society is becoming too "normal." The two Siboni brothers, building contractors here in Jerusalem, have been accused of using strong-arm tactics to acquire tracts of land. Among their alleged misdeeds is the worst imaginable from a Zionist point on public television don't view: the pair are said have made the life of an American family whose property they coveted so wretched that the immigrants gave up and left Israel.

When the Sibonis' lawyer learned that "Nikui Rosh" had prepared a satirical sketch about his clients, he obtained a Supreme Court order enjoining the Broadcasting Authority from running it, on the grounds that it might prejudice their right to a fair trial. Because the Mordechal Kirscheobaum, the 36-year-old producer of "Nikui Rosh," subsequently consented to revise the sketch according to his understanding of an agreement hetween the Court and Yitzhak Livni, director general of the Broadcasting Authority. However, two weeks later the show was again canceled, when Livni decided that the offending sketch, set in the frontier days of the Americao West and depicting bad guys terrorizing peaceful pioneers, had not been sufficiently altered. The public furor over this second cancellation was greater than before, and Kirschenbaum ("I criticize, therefore, I am") announced he was quitting. But he didn't quit, and for the time being "Nikui Rosh" goes on, more popular than ever thanks to

Receotly, for instance, Prime Minister Rahin was depicted in a mock press conference as dodging reporters' questions regarding the Palestinians: actors costumed as ostriches were theo shown burying their beads whenever they beard the word "Palestinians." On another program, it was implied that the Government was considering heating up the Syrian front to divert attention from Israel's economic and social problems. Rabin declared in a Labor Party meeting that this skit "went beyond permissible limits," but Kirschenbaum and Livni say that no private signals of disapproval reached

'Did we ask for help when we arrived as immigrants?"

In the substitute "Nikui Rosh" program on crime and protection rackets that was finally aired after the Siboni brouhaha, the setting of the main musical skit was transferred from the Wild West to 1930's Chicago. The gangsters in it were jovial and sadistic, the citizenry sheeplike, the police either dimwitted or no the take, and the crusading politician was a phony, just interested io catching small fry. He suggests, however, that "Nikui Rosh" has more hite than "Laugh-In" did and makes clearer sense usually than "Monty Python": he further points out that unlike "TW3," it is being made and shown in a country which is-despite sppearances-caught in s percetual crisis of a kind that might be expected to involve martial law and heavy censorship.

"Of the 600 items we've taped during the past two years, only one has been cut besides the Sibonis sketch and that was a song about bombiog terrorist bases oext to refugee camps in Lebanoo," Kirscheobaum says. "Nikui Rosh" seldom makes fun of ooo-Israelis. Occasionally, a certain, dense "President Chevrolet" or s jovial American diplomat with a German accent makes a brief sppearance, but as for Sadat, Arafat and company or the Russians, they are never mentiooed on the program. "That'a not because wa think Arafat and Brezhnev aren't ripe for satire," Kirscheobaum explains. "But the job of sending them up is that Palestinians' and the Russians'. Ours is lampooning our own. That's what the writers of our show always have in their heads."

A quartet of writers, sl. between 24 and 28 year3 of age, are responsible for the material oo "Nikui Rosh." Their youthfulness undoubtedly accounts for the more sophomoric level of some of the show's humor, hut also for much of it that is fresh and sharp. There is general agreement among the four that the show has almost total freedom. Leger's 'Clash of Contrasts'

'L'Aviateur' has all the dynamism and energy of the subject that inspired it."

Meanwhile, there is plenty to be grateful for in the Peris exhibition. That reference to "modern architecture quoted above, is brought to vivid pictorial life in ona of the best of these pictures, called simply "Architecture" (1923)), in which the "clash of contrast" that Léger so much relished in is stated and resolved with cnoaummataskill. If only for its paintings of the 1920's, indeed, this show

"L'Aviateur" (1920), for example, is not only a definite statement of its theme—an audacious one for its day-but one of those pictures in which all the elements of Leger's large, encompassing vision seem to be beld in heroic suspension. It looks tack on, and consolidates, his earlier interest in the purely formal aspects of Cubism—an interest beautifully represented bere by the "Variation de Formes" of 1913-at the same time that it looks forward to the more graphic structure of his later paintings.

Compared with the latter, this is still a relatively "romantic" picture, crowded with atmosphere and incident, with subtle modeling and minute shifts of tone. Yet it has all the dynamism and energy of the subject that inspired it. It is a marvelous picture.

From the 1920's, too, there is a wonderful "Femine Couchèe" (1921) from the "Déjeuner" series, and a very, different kind of painting, "Les Deux Profils" (1928), in which Leger draws closer to the Spanish classicism of Picasso and Gris. With this painting, we are already on the threshold of the later Leger, and it is to the period 1930-54 that more than half the exhibition is devoted."

There was a time, not so long ago, when the later Leger was looked upon with a certain condescension. In abandoning the subtle shifts and accretions of Cubist modeling in which he had once excelled for the bolder outlines and more forthright color of the later printings, Léger was sometimes thought to have become a more superficial artist. If we no longer think this, it is partly, I suppose, because so much of the painting of recent years has babitnated us to a greater simplicity of style. In this context, the mastery of the latter pictures is more visible, their originality and power more directly felt. If the early Leger called inevitably for comparison with Picasso, the later Leger asks to be placed beside Matisse. It would, in fact, be immensely interesting to see the late works of Leger and Matisse brought together in an exhibition. Both artists remained obsessed with their abiding subjects, yet both came to deal with them almost exclusively in terms of floating areas of flat, hard-edge color and emphatic

The great difference, of course, is that whereas Matisse dreamed of dissolving all traces of drawing inpure color, Leger held fast to drawing, making it bolder and more visible, as an essential pictorial constituent in his "clash of contrasts." It is in the "clash" of drawing and cnlor—each made separate and emphatic, yet brought. together with such dramatic force—that Leger captures his subjects in his later work. In that work, which we are still very far from fully appreciating, be sustained hisgenius with a new energy and authority.

me time, however, Rogovin's sitters face the camera in the very same poses adopted by kings and popes in the paintings of Titian, Velasquez and Rubens, and they gaze out of the picture with the same kind of calm self-assurance. They are no more in awe of the viewer than Philip II of Spain was

It is precisely this regal self-assurance, combined with a profound indifference to or ignorance of the artistic, sartorial and cosmetic atandards of the average American, that makes Rogovin's portraits either frightening or exhillarating. If the viewer believes that there is spaca enough in the world for everyone to do his own thing without interfering with others, then the sight of such blind self-confidence is exhilarating. But if the viewer doubts that there is enough space, and if he values his own way of living, then it can be frightening.

In either case, pictures such as these take the viewer beyond the walls of the gallery and confront him or ber with problems that must be faced in real life. It is very rare for modern art to do this. Yet the pictures of Milton Rogovin and Ken Heyman are certainly more than mere reportage. In their own ways, they expresa the ideal of universal brotherhood that is one of the deepest commitments of modern man. Perhaps they do not always qualify as art, hut this kind of expression is one of the functions of art.

Philadelphia Refurbishes For the Bicentennial

By JOHN CANADAY

PHILADELPHIA

The popular complaint that the Bicentennial is a bore doesn't hold in Philadelphia, et least not in its two great art museums, where the year is being celebrated with minimum emphasis on knee breeches and powdered wigs. Philadelphians, after all, have grown up with the Liberty Bell, and Independence Hall is so familiar that it is only a degree more venerable than Wanamaker's. Sidestepping clichés, the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts and the Philadelphia Museum of Art are observing the Bicertennial with one Tricentermial and two Centennial exhibitions and are giving all three a vigorous here-and-now emphasis.

The Academy celebrated its 61st birthday 100 years ago as part of Philadelphia's sensationally successful Centennial Exposition by moving into a new building that it has occupied ever since. One of the finest examples of imaginative eclecticism in this country or, for that matter, anywhere, the building will be reopened to the public on April 24 following a period of closure for restoration to its original glory. The collection, which has been one of those tip-of-the-iceberg affairs, will be revealed in an exhibition called "In This Academy," tracing the Academy's record as tastemaker, both on and off the track, from its inception to the present. ("Off the track" includes most of the 1950's and 1960's. Just bow tha Academy will deal with this embarrassment remains to be seen, but the tenor of the ent mood is "Right on!") Philadelphia was already more than a century old when the Declaration of Independence was signed, since there had been Swedish settlements on the site before William Penn christened it as a Quaker colony in 1682. Looking all the way back, the Philadelphia Museum of Art is adding this earlier century to the 200 years being celebrated across the land with an exhibition called Three Hundred Years of Philadelphia," opening April II. In the meanwhile, the lit, unfriendly and unloved building that seemed at last to have defeated all efforts to make it a worthy habitation for its great collections. The enormous monumentan effectively mammoth, neoclassical temple outside seemed to have been deaigned inside to frustrate the genius of its first director, Fiske Kimball, back when it was built in 1928. Then tha Great Depression, striking a few months latter, made it seem that the problem of installing collections in the forbidding galleries might never have to be met because money might never be found. There was a period during those times when Fiske Kimball slept in the museum as night watchman to guard the sprinkling of paintings and sculptures that it held. Statistically, the Philadelphia Museum of Art is 100 years old, being the descendant of an art museum chartered for the 1876 Exposition, so the reopening last week was declared a Centennial celebration. In all other ways, bowever, the museum was born with the new building and Fiske Kimball's directorship not quite 50 years ago. The one oversight in the currently happy actuation in which the present director. Evan Turner, and his curators find themselves is that there is no adequate tion that Fiske Kimball created from acratch the great museum they have inherited.

WASHINGTON, D.C. ast week, Washington was the City Beautiful. as L'Enfant and McMillan intended, with the blush of magnolias and cherry blossoms laced lightly with snow. It was false spring, and false winter, and even the city didn't seem quite real. Washington can be heartbreakingly lovely in the old-fashioned way of cities as places of dignity, elegance and grace, in spite of the mayhem being visited on it by commercial developers and government builders

There is another kind of city inside the Renwick Gallery, the Smithsonian's handsomely restored Old Corcoran building that is now its national design showcase. "Signs of Life: Symbols in the American City" is a presentation of the 20th-century world of suburb, strip and sprawl—the uniquely American landscape that is studiously ignored by architects, planners and tastemakers in spite of the fact that it is the country's inescapable urban reality. It is here described, dissected and analyzed with brilliant scholarship and overwhelming completeness by the Philadelphia firm of Venturi and Rauch, the celebrated proponents of the Pop environment. Denise Scott Brown and Steven Izenour were the principals in charge, with Izenour the designer of the installation.

This exhibition is, therefore, a very special event. In spite of all the hints and teasers dropped in smaller shows and special publications by Denise Scott Brown and her husband, Robert Venturi, in recent years, this is a wrap-up effort: it is the definitive dissertation on the forms symbols and sources of the American way of life. The built environment of modern society is carefully rendered and interpreted, from the invention of solutions for new needs to the bowdlerization of the past into acceptable images of aspiration and status. Whet emerges is a revealing picture of today's esthetic standards that has everything to do with what is, and little to do with what anyone thinks should be. The results go beyond the celebration of the "ordinary" to express a mobile society and the pluralism of its taste. All this is observed and documented with a staggering wealth of material, shrewd visual and historical insights, and clinical clarity.

In fact, this exhibition should have had prominent space et New York's Modern or Metropolitan, if either institution were seriously concerned with the legitimate development of theory and practice in terms of the architecture and urbanism of our age. But there is a particular pleasure to viewing it at the Renwick. To see McDonald's glowing golden arches (actual examples) embracing the Renwick's Victorian Corinthian columns is worth the trip to Washington. Set against this building's formal, 19th-century elegance—scheduled to be reduced to rubble not too long ago—the show becomes a double consciousoess-raiser.

Because the space is small, the display is tightly condensed-which may even increase its effectiveness. It successfully balances didacticism and fun. Almost at dead center, there are three "model rooms" by Dian Boone, representing the norms of American taste. They are wickedly, tellingly observed.

An upper class, "country house" room is furnished with correct and bandsome antiques plus the proper House Beautiful-type flowered sofa and chair, and epproved accessories from just the right kind of dried flower arrangement to a butler's tray coffee table and a "period" magazine rack with the Wall Street Journal discreetly visible. The builder's "row house" room is a middle-class, furniture-store medley of matching, deep pile aqua rug and velvet upholstery grouped around a color TV in a "Renaissance" console, glass and brass and "Mediterranean

The suburban "family room" is all Scotch plaid reproduction "colonial" comfort, a prominent "dry sink" bar under a fake tavern sign, coffee grinder lamps and Coca Cola cans, and the inevitable picture window.

These rooms are joined by full-scale photo mock-ups of their environment the "Williamsburg" type development (well-landscaped restraint), the row house city street (eclectic "personalized" touches of "hot" to "cool" historical reference in doors, sbutters and decorative details), and typical suburbia (set-back houses on lawns that are meant to be alike, but not to look alike.)

Buttressing these displays are photographs and text panels that are an encyclopedia of recorded phenomena. Suburbia is defined not only in terms of economic stratification and social symbols, but as the expression of the traditional American rural ideal, plus the new leisure ideal, reinforced by domestic technology. This is the myth of the commuting "country squire" served by G.M. and G.E. The documentation is so overwhelming in its quantity and richness that it can barety be absorbed. How far the visitor wants to pursue the information depends on his standing strength and attention span. Fortunately, there are plans to bring out much of it later in book form.

The show comes brilliantly alive with the neon and lighted signs and billboards packed into the slender.

19th-century gallery labeled "The Strip." The effect of this vibrant, abstract montage of color, light and motion, from McDonald's to Mobil, is quite startlingly beautiful in the perverse way of Pop Art. The Holiday Inn sign never looked so good. Full-size hiliboards range from the historical artist-illustrator examples of Bull Durham tobacco to the instant impact of today's immense, art-director images for the high-speed road. An erudite iconography of the strip is expounded in a supplementary panel display.

In the next room, there is a section on the city street, with its different system of spaces, signs and symbols. And throughout the galleries, there are outstanding photographs by Stephen Shore and a series of not-to-he-missed paintings of diners by John Bader.

What is so convincing and impressive about the exhibition as a whole is the comprehensive definition of the environmental and architectural art and taste of our time, and its careful relationship to the complex, conditioning factors of contemporary life. It places apparent ephemera and questionable esthetics into a secure historical continuum, and it establishes the current architectural vocabulary of myth, symbol and source. It can be called one of the most significant contributions to the writing of art history since the identification of Mannerism; there is really nothing controversial about it.

The Venturis claim that myth and symbolism have always been an integral, legitimate part of the style and values of any period. "People are more interested in representing their ideals and aspirations through architecture," the show text tells us, "than they are in noticing how well a building expresses its structure

One cannot quarrel with that conclusion. It is, in fact, perception long overdue. But one can argue with the Venturis' lectures on how the lessons implicit in the "messy vitality" of the real environment can or should be used by architects and designers. It is true that we can learn from suburbia and the strip; but there is something profoundly artificial ebout turning the results of historical and cultural process into a conscious and arbitrary esthetic act. One man's symbolism is another man's

That does not make these conclusions any less useful to art and history. This is the kind of show that changes the way you look at the world.

The Arensberg collection with its unrivaled group of Marcel Duchamp's early paintings and later shenanigans, its Brancusi scuiptures and Paul Klees the Cubist and Surrealist work in the Gallatin Collection, the Ma-tisses in the White Collection, the Impressionists in the Tyson Collection, the old masters in the Johnson Collection and the whole range from medieval sculpture and architecture to art of the moment represented by other collections and recent acquisitions—all these look as if they, like the visitors, are able for the first time to breathe in the once-impossible galleries.

Under Theodor Siegl, the job of conservation has elso gone forward since last year's closure. A visitor can come upon a favorite an instance, in my case, being Le Nain's "Procession of the Ram"-and find that it looks more glorious than ever without realizing at first what has happened. "The Procession of the Ram" has been cleaned (not skinned aine) to reveal the purity of its color and the delicacy of the landscape at the horizon.

Mario Hirsch

As soon as somebody fills out a warranty card the camera becomes a"used" camera. Which means if there is anything wrong with it, he'd lose the camera for a week or two while it's being fixed.

So what I tell them, is to first put the camera through the mill. Check everything out. Shoot a roll or two of film. Have them developed and see how they come out. Then, if everything is all right, fill out the warranty card. If everything isn't all right, bring it back to me and I'll take another camera off the shelf and give it to you. Of course when you buy a camera like a Canon chances are slim anything is wrong with it anyway. But it's just one less headache I want my customers to have.

I guess what it all comes down to, is that when somebody buys a camera from Mario Hirsch, the sale isn't over. I want that person to be happy. Happy with the camera he bought. And happy with the price he bought it for.

You see the only thing better than a company that stands behind their cameras is a camera store owner who stands behind his customers.

To determine if the soil is ready for planting, fork over a shovelful and squeeze handful into a ball. Let it drop to the ground and if it crumhles it is dry enough to prepare the garden for planting. Should it remain almost intact, the soil is still too wet to work. Forking wet ground results in a lumpy seed bed and poor soil structure. Even if soil is fertile, add organic matter in the form of peat moss, compost, or rotted manure. Ary of these organic materials improve the texture, enrich the soil and increase bacterial growth.

Prepare the garden area by first tilling or forking over to a depth of at least teo inches and remove large stones. If a soil test indicates a pH of less than 6 lt is important to apply sufficient ground limestone to raise the pH to at least 6.5. Apply lime as required and over this spread a layer of at least an inch of peat or compost adding a light dressing of dried cow manure and 5 pounds of a complete fertilizer such as 5-10-5 or two pounds of superphosphate to each 100 square feet. Turn all these materials under. thoroughly incorporating in the upper four inches of the existing soil before sowing seed. Rake the area smooth. Place a stake at each end of the row and stretch a tant twice between them to mark off the rows using the hoe handle to make a shallow furrow along the line.

Preparing For Those Special Family Events

Weddings, graduations, family celebrations, parties and outings are all exciting family events that amateur photographers are always eager to record oo film. Too often, however, only a few skimpy pictures are made before the event is over-usually a result of little or oo advance planning with oot enough thought given to the many photographic possibilities the occasion may hold.

The point that escapes many photographers is that an event should he photographed differently from a scene that requires one perfect picture. Events tell a story and cover a sequeoce in time, so they need a series of pictures to convey what really happened. They need, on the part of the photographer, preparation and planning, because once that occasion is past it will not be repeated.

There are two kinds of preparation and planning required to do a proper joh of photographing an event of any kind: checking all equipment and making certain it is ready for use; and examining the potential development of the occasioo so one can work up some kind of scenario for shooting. This scenario may be quite informal, but it will serve to remind the photographer to shoot a planned series of photos instead of one or two highlights.

Checking the camera is important. It pays to shoot and process a roll of film in advance since equipment that is used infrequently can sometimes have an unpleasant surprise in store for its ownera flash unit that won't fire, a dead battery in the exposure meter, a film advance that sticks, fingerpriots on the lens, or a shutter that sticks.

After checking equipment to make sure that all of it is working smoothly, the photographer must decide oo what film he will oeed for the job. Most amateurs will want to shoot color film, and many will prefer oegative color since they are interested in getting color priots; rather than slides. This is a medium speed film, so if the event to be photographed takes place indoors, extra light will be needed. To most, photographers that means flash - either flashcuhes, hulbs or electronic flash. In -. any case, the use of flash requires extra care, first in a purely mechanical sense. Too

The fact is that, while providing extra light with flash is a great coovenience, it is also an extra challenge to the photographer. While using it, he adds an additional restrictioo to his function: he must pay attentioo to hia positioo in relation to the subject's. He must think of the quantity of light he is spreading around, and gauge tha effect this light will have on the picture. Because the introduction of sudden flash of light often causes people to blink, stare, or look frozen into immobility, the photographer should shoot more pictures than eems necessary. People tend become accustomed to the flasbes of light after a while, and are less startled by them than they were in the beginning. And through the law of averages, some of the expressions caught io the wift light will be natural. The point is to shoot plenty of film, and resign ooeself to discarding the unflattering pictures. It is far better to do this than to economize with film, flash and effort, only to find, a week later, a sorry reportage of an occasion which will oever be repeated. Amateurs must learn to many pictures do you have to take?" Pros know better: they pay no attention to the teasing comments, and conceotrate oo their task. Photographing an event is work, and baving decided to do it, one must not be distracted by the jesting of the participants. People are frequently selfconscious about being photographed and if the photographer is a friend, their embarassment takes the form of teasing or clowning. It is best to keep right on work-ing, because if the photographer loses his role for photographer has to make a decision in advance. Does he really want to take pictures? Or is he willing to dilute the end product for the sake of the amenities? If he decides honestly, at least he woo't feel disappointed later on.

Let us assume that the photographer is serious about his project. He is going to photograph an event; he has nleoty of film; and he is prepared to fend off the distractions of friends. How should be plan the shooting? First of all, one should consider what the event is, what is likely to happen, where people will be situated, and what is the best position (or positions) from to catch the high points of the occasion. In thinking about it, it becomes clear that the occasion-to-bephotographed has content; the event contains a series of moments: things will happen to reveal emotion and character, as well as individual bits of action. The fact is that the photographer is planning to shoot a picture story. And picture story, even the most informal kind, has certain requirements. To begin with, it needs enough sub-along. Most important, it oeeds sequence; a beginning, a middle and an end. This fact, while so obvious, is often forgotten, eveo by professional photographers. Yet this structure of heginning, middle and end can be discovered in any event. Photographically, it will make a set of pictures far more interesting than if they lack it. It sounds simple, but unless it is planned, and learned as the morning, hefore the coostance (pictures) to carry it cert, there will be some last minute practicing. This should be the occasion for some good close-ups which will probably be impossible during the actual coocert. Then comes dressing for the concert, behind - the - scenes waiting around with the other young musicians; tuning up; the actual performance; taking a. bow; greeting friends and family afterward; and then taking the instrument home.

If the photographer has planned ahead of time he will be on the spot for each of these segments of the picture story. He will not run out of film in his camera at a critical momaot, and he will not be distracted by the proud parents of his musical subject. If he is persistent and has a little photographic experience, be should eod up with a charming picture

The same tactics can be applied to many other eveots. Tha critical part is in the planning. If we photograph evects without considering in advance what is likely to happen, we almost always lose the beginning and the end. What we end up with are the highlights. That may 7.9-cent stamp in the new Americana Series. It is being issued to meet the higher rate for bulk mail that went into effect on Dec. 28, 1975. The stamp will replace the 6.3cept bulk rate stamp that was issued in October, 1974.

The trio of U. N. commemoratives is being issued to mark the fourth session of UNCTAD, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, which is scheduled to be a relatively short conference but which will still bring together more than a thousand delegates for most of May. There are 1S3 member oations of UNCTAD.

The organization was established as a full-fledged organ of the U. N. in 1964, and held a three-mooth conference that year in Geneva. There have been conferences every four years since, usually about two months long. m New Delhi in 1968 and in Santiago de Chile in 1972.

The conferences provide an opportunity for an exchange of views and some economic give-and-take between "have" nations such as the United States, West Germany and Japan, which import much of the world's raw materials, and "have-not" nations seeking markets for raw materials and development of their resources. At Nairobi, the emphasis will be on developing some kind of arrangement to buy up raw materials when their prices sag and sell accumulated stocks when prices are high.

UNCTAD, which has a secretariat of 370 at its Geneva headquarters, started with the overall aim of promoting international trade, particularly between countries at different stages of develop ment, between the developing countries themselves, and between countries of different economic and social systems. Its priocipal accomplishment seems to be continued pursuit of its goal.

The three U. N. commemoratives have a common design, by Henry Bencsath of the United States, showing cargo being hoisted for shipment and a world globe superimposed on a graph to suggest an increase in trade. The stamps are in four colors.

Trade and development stressed in new U.N. issue.

Information on the acquisition of U. N. materials, stamps aod covers, is available from the U. N. Postal Administration, P. O. Box 5900, New York N. Y. 10017.

The 7.9-cent stamp will have first-day-of-issue ceremonies in conjunction with Stamporee 76 USA, ao international philatelic exhibition spoosored by the Florida Federation of Stamp Clubs and the Cuban Philatelic Club of Miami.

The central feature of the design is a drum on which an American eagle is superimposed. A pair of drum sticks is in the foreground. Except for the eagle, the drum is similar to the ones in Archibald M. Willard's painting, "The Spirit of 76." Across the bottom and up the right side of the stamp appears "Beat the Drum for Liberty and the Spirit of '76." Between the lettering and the base of the orum appears "USA 7.9c" and below the denomioation "Bulk Rate." This designation did not appear on the earlier 6.3-cent

The design is the work of Bernard Glassman of Kramer. Miller, Loweien and Glassman, a Philadelphia graphics firm that developed the design concept for the Americana Series. Stamps in this series have a common design, derived essentially from the arrangement of lettering. They are printed in one color of ink on a different color of paper stock to create a multicolor effect. The 7.9-cent stamp is being printed in red ink on canary paper.

For bulk mail users, the stamp will be available in precanceled form and will be produced in coils of 500 and 3,000, which will be the only coil sizes available to them. The stamp will be available in unprecanceled form for collectors at philatelic centers and by mail order from the Philatelic Sales, Washington, D.C. 20265, with a 50cent handling charge per

The unprecanceled form will be sold in quantities of 10 only at the philatelic centers and by the Philatelic

Rarities Sale

With special obeisance to the Bicentennial, the "Rarities of the World" auction being put on March 31 by the Robert A. Siegel Auction Galleries is offering some of the choicest items of Americana ever presented and it would not be surprising to have the totals come out around the millioo-dollar mark.

The sale will open on an impressive Bicentennial note with a letter addressed to The Hon. John Hancock. Philadelpbia, and postmarked New York, July 4, 1776, which makes it a first-day-ofnationhood cover. Other notable historic pieces of the Bicentennial era include a land grant to a Revolutionary War officer signed by George Washington as President and fine specimens of free franks of John Adams and Thomas Jefferson.

It would seem reasonable to wonder whether the 1975 price inflation will continue in the face of the far greater available supply of 1976 sets. Next Weekend

The annual spring edition of the Westchester Coin and Stamp Show (called "Wesp-nex") will be held next Friday through Sunday in the Westchester County Center in White Plains. Hours on Friday are 1 to 11 P.M.; on Saturday, 10 A.M. to 11 P.M., and on Sunday, 11 A.M. to 7 P.M.

Up to Date

To the Numismatics Editor: As a result of news items In your column I have purchased a number of the coin and medal offerings of the U.S. Mint, but somehow I seem to have missed some of them. Would it be possible for you to print a complete rundown of everything that has been available and the cut-off dates, everything that is still available and the cutoff dates, and what will become available in the future and the cut-off dates?

ROBERT JAMET New Paltz, N.Y.

[The past is past, and the future I cannot foretell; I can only try to keep readers abreast of what is current. This effort has invariably included a beadlined announcement of the opening of an ordering period, at least one or two subsequent Sunday column reminders of the Mint's offering, and then an equally prominent reportwell in advance-when the Mint announces the impendiog end of the ordering period.

The only currently availare all the able coin offering that has an "impendiog" cut-off (the ordering period opeoed Feb. 2 and the cut-off date bas not been announced) is the 12-coin non-silver 1976 Mint set (also called the uncirculated set). Here is a repeat of the ordering instructions: ould not be Each set costs $6; there is a per-order limit of five sets; checks nr money orders (no cash) should be made payable to the U.S. Mint and mailed to the Numismatic Service, U.S. Mint, 55 Mint Street, San Francisco 94103. The special 40 percent silver Bicentennial three-coin proof set ($12) and uncirculated set ($9) are still available too,

The 48-year tenure of Joho Edgar Hoover as director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation is commemorated on a medal just issued by the U.S. Mint. The medal, authorized by Congress under Public Law 93-309, dated June 8, 1974, has been added to the Mint's National Historical Medals catalogue and is now available for sale to the pub-

According to Acting Director of the Mint Frank H. MacDonald, the design (shown below) was drawn from photographs and quotations of Mr. Hoover, and copies of the F.B.L. seal and motto. The obverse design was executed by Frank Gasparro, chief engraver of the Mint; tha reverse is the work of John Mercanti, a member of the engraving staff. Mr. Hoover's portrait dominates the obverse, with his name encircling the upper border. In the background are views of the Department of Justice Bullding and F.B.L. headquarters, now known as the J. Edgar Hoover Building. The reverse design depicts the F.B.l. seal and gives prominence to the inscription, "Director 1924-1972."

Mr. McDonald reports that an enlarged version of the medal will serve as a me-morial plaque-24 inches in diameter-on the J. Edgar Hoover Building in Washingtoo; the plaque will be affixed to the wall just inside the huilding's main entrance on Pennsylvania Avenue.

The medal, No. 661 in the Mint's catalogue, is three inches in diameter; it is available in bronze only, and is being struck at the main Mint in Philadelphia, It can be purchased over-the-counter for $5 at the Mint's sales desk in the Treasury Department building and at the Mint's facilitiea in Philadelphia, Denver and San Francisco. The medal is also available by mail, for $5.25, from the Numismatic Service, Bureau of the Mint, 55 Mint San Francisco

A SOLID GOLD INVESTMENT FROM THE ROCK OF GIBRALTAR?

A golo coin is, in itself, a beautiful thing to own. But more than that, amid the uncertainties of 1976, few investments are more secure. These gold coins are Gibraltar's first ever - and only the second ever pound-oenominated issue of coins exceeding £5 in face value. Minted in .916 fine gold, the £100 coin weighs 31.104 gms and is 34 mm in diameter; the £50 coin weighs 15.552 gms, 27 mm in diameter; the £25 coin is 7.776 gms, 22 mm in diameter. A maximum of 750 proof sets of all three coins will be struck from hand-polished dies, ensuring a mirror-bright background and frosted relief. Supplied in red leather presentation cases, these complete sets will be true collector's pieces.

Uncirculated coins will also be struck to the limit of 25,250 sovereign size coins —as specified by Royal Proclamation - or the equivalent in the larger denominations. This limit cannot be exceeded, ensuring an investment. The entire issue will be struck at the Royal Mint of Great Britain, and is available only from Spink and Son Limited.

On Soil Testing

By PAUL KING

Soil, on which most of mankind depends for its food, is simply air, water. organic matter and mineral matter. Yet a most complex series of chemical, physical and bacterial reactions take place as plants grow in it. Though man has farmed for thousands of years, it was only in the 1840's that Julius Van Liebig, an eminent German chemist, really began understand and explain the dynamics of plant growth relation to the minerals the soil. Since Liehig's early findings soil science has become an important scientific discipline ranging over many fields and amassing an enormous hody of knowledge. One of Liebig's early findings remains true today. ". . . by the deficiency or absence of one necessary constituent, all others being present, the soil is rendered harren for all those crops to the life of which that one constituent is indispen-

This is the "Law of the Minimum" and is of great importance to the large-scale farmer as well as the home gardener. What this law is saying to the home gardener is that to grow crops successfully, the soil must have every mineral the crop needs io available (a most important word) form. These constituents are divided into two classes-major and minor. The major ones are nitrogen (N), phosphorus (P), potassium, or potash (K), calcium (Ca), magnesium (Mg), and sulfur (S). The minor ones (needed in very small quantities) are iron, manganese, copper, zinc, horon, molybdenum, chlorine and cobalt.

Though there is oo such thing as a perfect soil, a soil consisting of the above minerals in svallable form, organic matter, air and weter -in good balance-is a productive soil. Fortunately the home gardener can usually achieve a halance like this with a reasonable expenditure of time and money by the use of fertilizers, lime

But before beginning to add things, the soil should be tested to determine which clements, if any, are lacking. This can be done with one of the home soil testing kits available at garden centers logues. These tests and procedures are not too difficult for those so inclined. My objection to "loving hands at home" is due to certain limitations: the results tend to be indicative rather than precise. One thing cao be said for home testing: it will often indicate when a professional soil test

In this country, Cooperative Extension, an affiliate of the United States Department of Agriculture, will test soil free of charge or for a minimal fee, depending on the country. I have found the Extension Service (both in rural New Hampshire and suhurban Boston) to be staffed with trained dedicaled people who are really willing to help. Offices are usually located in the county seat and listed in the telephone

The first step is the collection of a proper soil sample. Define the area to be tested: no one bit of earth can be taken to represent an entire garden or yard. For the average home garden, four core like samples from different parts of the property will usually be sufficient. These do not have to be large; the final soil sample need be only about e half-

Mix the four specimens thoroughly, remove all debris and rocks and break up any clods. Air dry the composite sample and place about a half pint in a clean container. A small plastic hag with a twist tie will do nicely, but do not use a paper bag or a glass container. Be sure to attach a label with your name and address. A oote telling what you want to grow will be useful.

When the test results arrive the real work begins. Most Extensioo Services provide suggestions for improvement of the soil rather than straight analysis. Recommendations include the amount of standard fertilizer to use per 1,000 feet with some leeway in choosing the verious analyses availabl».

Poul King operates a home tree form and has mode a recent study of soils.

Cooperative Extension Service is a national system of offices linked with the United States Department of Agriculture, each state's agricultural college and the local county's government. They are usually located in the county seat and staffed by professionally trained personnel with specialties in agriculture, horticulture, home economics and 4-H programs. State residents can rely on these offices for free helpful information on local agricultural and gardening problems. Many of these offices can supply bulletins for a nominal charge on common gardening pursuits. A few offices even schedule field days and educational programs for their local residents. Telephone numbers and addresses are listed below for the Cooperative Extension offices located in the greater metropolitan region.

For example, corn needs an abundance of nitrogen, but too much nitrogen and not enough phosphorus will result in poor tomatoes. The extension office can help with these problems and often heve available helpful literature shout the area's

Though the argument of organic versus chemical fertilizers hes almost become one philosophy, often with passions raging, a reasonable approach combining the two usually produces the best results. There is no question that the more organic metter soil contains, the hetter its quality and water retentioo. But organic edditives and fertilizers are often slow acting and low in essential nutrients. On a net basis of N - P - K, organic fertilizers tend to be more expensive than chemical fertilizers. I have emulated two of my New Hampshire neighbors who ere excellent end successful gardeners. I use cow manure every other year, some homemade compost and modest amounts of 8-16-16 chemical fertilizer, 1 have had excellent results with my tomatoes, cucumhers, beans, peas and asparagus. My root crops, beets, turnips and carrots, have been only fair. This spring after I receive my soil test results, I will oo doubt make some adjustments as this year I plan to try some "oo till" corn.

Soil tests will also indicate the emount of lime, if needper I,000 square feet. The acidity of the soil is expressed as a number in range from 4 (very acid) to 9 (very alkaline) with 7 considered neutral and is referred to as the pH of the Most temperate zone soils tend to become acid as abundant rainfall leaches the calcium and magnesium. Acid soils can be brought close to neutral by the use of crushed limestone which is a very low-cost material Alkaline soils can be corrected by the use of aluminum sulphate. Some plants do better in acid soils, a few in alkaline soil, but most vegetables grow best in a slightly acid soil (pH 6.0-6.5).

To echieve a loamy type soil additives are usually used. Compost, leafmold, peat and sand are common edditives. Some of the sceweed and fish compounds are showing promise as soil

Verticillium wilt of tomatoes is caused by a fungus fruit. Control. Resistant va-

Soon chocolate spots develop in the middle of the yellow areas and some of these lower leaves drop off. Mid-day wilting and early morning recovery is common. Slitting the stem near the soil line will show tan streaks just inside the bark. This coloration seldom extends to the top. Loss of leaves and vigor results in smaller, paler, and fewer

Blossom end rot of tomatoes causes large, sunkenblack areas near the blossom end of the fruit. This condition results from the plantfailing to get sufficient water! and calcium to the rapidly developing fruit cells. If drought follows a wet spring which has permitted rapid succulent growth, the disease will be severe in early clusters. Control includes keeping soil moisture as uniformas possible, avoiding hoeing within one foot of the stem, delaying transplanting until the soil is warm, mulching, and using fertilizer high in phosphate in proportion to nitrogen early in the season.

Early blight of tomato and potato causes target spots be controlled by four or five weekly sprays with maneb (three tablespoons per gallon) beginning wheo first tomato fruits set or wheo potato plants are eight ioches-tall.

Clubroot of cabbage and cauliflower may be a problem in old gardens where these crops have been grown for many years. The causal slime enters the roots-and results in large swellings of them. Such plants wilt during the beat of the day and generally die or at least produce a poor hesd. Broccoli, radish and turnips can also be affected. Control comes from putting a solution of PCNB (I Ib of 75% WP-in 16 gallons of water) into the transplant hole using about 1/2 pint per plant. harvest of good plump fruit Plant the seeds at a depth about twice the size of the seed, and place in a warm place to germinate. The time to plant is eight to ten weeks before the soil and weather are going to be frost-free and warm enough to set plants out.

To keep seedlings from getting long-stemmed and leggy, refrain from giving them too much fertilizer. Use a low-nitrogen one, such as a 5-10-10, and use half the recommended amount After the seeds are germinated, move the plants to a cool, sunny place to hold them back and encourage them to grow stocky. Do not let them become crowded. Snip out the smaller, weaker ones with neil scissors so that the better plants have a chance to continue developing into strong seedlings. In the garden select a suony well-drained location for the tomstoes. If the ground is hilly, plant tomatoes below the brow of the slope, and not at the bottom where cold air can collect. Tomatoes which do not need staking-New Yorker, Galaxy or the small one, Chico-need a good prickly mulch like bay, to discourage slugs, and to keep your fruits

Most tomato plants are such vigorous growers they will need staking. Use either old - fashioned stake pushed into the ground, one of the new cylinders of wire, a tepee for the plants to grow on. It is customary to pinch out the secondary branches (called suckers) growing out from the axils of the leaves to strengthen the growing stems of staked plants.

Before tomato seedlings are ready to plant outdoors, they must be hardened off or adjusted to the chmate. Put them on a sunny porch or enclosure so they can get used to outdoor temperatures, direct sun and breezes.

When the time comes to prepare the area for transplanting, make fairly large holes, put dramage in the bottom (broken up clay pots or corn cobs can be used), fill the next layer with very rich, nutritious soil and top with good loam mixed with fine, finished compost. Ao arrangement for getting water lo the roots, such as a sunken tin can, loog funnel or length of hose run down to root depth, can be a great help. Tomatoes are heavy feeders. (It is best not to put them where eggplants or peppers grew the year

Luckily tomatoes have the capacity to send out roots all along the stem. If the young plants do grow long and spindly, they can ba "buried right up to the first leaves, preferably horizontally. This method will actually strengthen weak skinny plants. Though they will be tilted at first, the seedlings will straighten up very quick-

Put a collar of some sort around the plants to keep off cut worms. Use a frozen juice can with both ends removed, or a cardboard collar. If the sun is bot, put up a shade of newspapers or brush to keep the plants from wilting.

Once plants are well sdjusted to the outdoor site, expect good progress to the stage of harvest. Green tomato horrworms may appear, but pick them off when seen. Chives, marigolds or nasturtiums grown nearby may reduce the worms. If dill is planted next to tomatoes, the horoworms will often move over to it instead.

Water tomatoes early in the morning, not in the evening, and add fertilizer rich in potassium and phosphorous once or twice during their periods of rapid growth. Pick the fauit at the end of a sunny period, if possible, to enjoy tha warm juicy goodness.

Crabapples bloom in early May

Planting a Specimen Tree

By IRENE MITCHELL

There are gardens whose entire claim to fame rests in one plant. In our town, for instance, there is a house known as "the one with that gorgeous clematis on the garage wall." That famous clematis is what in garden jargon is called a specimen

Just what gives a plant the right to be called a "specimen?" There are various criteria: striking foliage, a distinctive branching pattern, interesting bark, spectacular or unusual flowers, heautiful fruit, or any combination of

The scarlet hawthorn on my front lawn, a hlaze of color in late May when few other trees bloom, is a specimen. So are the curiously contorted corkscrew willnws down the street, the shimmering, swaying cutleaf weeping birch in a neighbor's yard, and that clematis. which is a solid sheet of flowers in June. Without a few well-chosen specimen plants, the average yard takes on the appearance of a motel or restaurant landscaping, tidy and durable, but distinctly uninteresting.

Sioce there are many plants distinctive enough to serve as specimens, how is one chosen? This is an artistic endeavor and the landscape must be viewed with an artist's eye.

Decide-first what the plant is to do: add color, emphasize some architectural feature, contrast with existing vegetation, create interest io

Color can eoter the picture in many ways. Set one flamecolored azalea against a group of low oeedled evergreens-a specimen! Or grow a spectacular climbing rose such as Blaze or Paul's Scarlet against a neutral back-ground. Everyone in the brightly flowered Many plants are boring oot of bloom, but some other plant can take the spotlight at that

For looger-lasting appeal, choose plants with bright foliage color. Particularly effective are those with red foliage such as ornamental plums or Japanese maples. Variegated foliage in many eroundcovers-ajuga, vinca. ivy-can make a landscape hrighter and less droopy.

One of the best ways to create aubtle beauty in a landscape is to use plants with different shades of green. The green of a birch is not the same as the green of a cherry. Evergreens, especially display shades ranging from apple green to graygreen, steely blue, gray-blue, and silver.

The silver-gray leaves of Russian olive are effective beside the somber deep green

I have a special fondness for trees and shrubs with colored bark, for this is often most evident in winter when other colors are lacking. Cherry trees with their speckled mahogany-colored bark, white-limbed birches, the almost black nark of mature Russian olives, and the brilliant red twigs of the red osier dogwood are all good. Or a plant may have architectural ioterest, unusual hranching or oddly-shaped leaves. All trees and shrubs have a specific branch outlice, and some, such as the aptly-named corkscrew willow, are distinctive. Winter is the best time to choose these as the shape of the plant can be seen without its summer mask of foliage. Leaf shape can he the attraction if a tree or shrub has finely-dissected leaves, leaves with bold angles such as the maple, or broad, succulent leaves that suggest a tropical effect. Most interesting gardens use plants whose leaves contrast with othersevergreens near broadleaved trees or lacy-neighborhood will notice. leaved specimens beside those whose foliage is thick and

> One good use for a speci-men plant is to emphasize or contrast some feature of the home. A plain fence front or privacy panel can be treated as a stage to display an intricately branched shrub or an espaliered pyracantha. A home that appears heavy and plain will benefit from plants that are airy and graceful, such as the hirches, honeylocusts, goldenrain tree, or weeping peach. Or choose plants whose bright berries will show up against a leafless winter scene.

Once the kind of effect is determined, pick the right plant for the site. If a sunloving plant is put into shade, it may create an effect other than the one sought. Nurserymen can generally advise on this point

Siting of a specimen plant extremely important. know of one very lovely smoke oush that is a symphony of delicate colors-pink, tan, orown, green—in late summer. But it is seldom noticed by most people because the owners chose to plant It in a crowded mass of other shrubbery. Give the specimen plant olenty of room to develop naturally so that drastic pruning will never be required.

Always remember why the particular plant is choseo. This will aid proper pruning. If it has unusual branching, he sure to prune out unwanted shoots that will eventually obscure that design. If the plant was chosen for its fountainlike grace, prune gently each year to eliminate rigid or angular branching. Red osier dogwood must be pruned carefully each year not only to preserve its superb simplicity, but also to encourage oew shoots each year sioce the older ones tend to fade in color. Any plant chosen for its spectacular flowering should be fertilized each year with eoough phosphorus to keep the flow-tion to spring flowers. They flowers and geranium will may not win a prize for blooms, but they are lovely for a terrace garden.

Needle evergreeos are useful including the yews and arborvitae, I particularly like the upright Japanesa dog-wood, barberry, mock or-ange, shadbush and crab epple. They all have flowers as well as fall berries and aurvive a good deal of shade. On my owo terrace, I favor the shade tolerant sourwood tree. Its white flowers appear in late summer and the seed poda remain well into January. But the best time of all is the fall, when we're treated to a glorious crimson foliage scene.

Smaller plants for a lessthan-sunny spot include the countless species of hardy ferns along with astilbe, ajuga and pachysandra with its spikey spring flowers. To add sparkle to the view, try the variegated forms of bosta or

Summer color can be provided by impatiens and anoual periwinkle, but just as useful are caladiums and daylilies, Quite a few tropical house plants are very shade tolerant so by all means, move them outside for a summer vacation.

At the other end of the city gardening spectrum are the completely exposed and vary windy rooftops. Temper both tha wind and the searing sun by planting a row of tall, rugged types first. Piants which will serve admirably for this purpose include Russian olive, tamarisk, rose of Sharon and forsythia.

My special favorite is the oft-maligned privet. If left untrimmed, these plants will become a fluffy masa of white fragrant flowers in June. These will be followed by the blue-black berries guaranteed to attract wild birds (not pigeons), If new young basal growth is removed, the older stems will develop these shrubs into magnificent treelike forms.

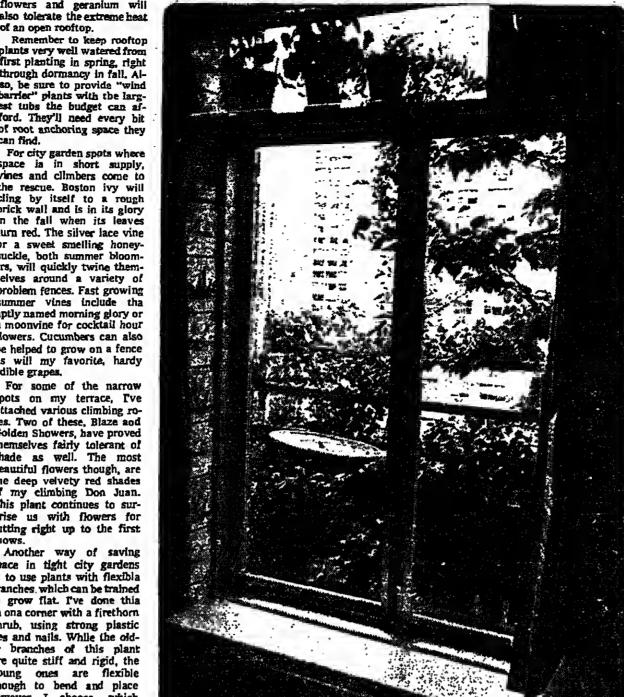

While the wind barrier and sun-shield plants become established, enjoy lots of carefree color by using pots of portulaca. This is ooa of the toughest, most pest-resistant and freely blooming colorful annuals I know of. Zinnias, marigolds, nasturtium, sunalso tolerate the extreme heat of an open rooftop.

Remember to keep rooftop plants very well watered from first planting in spring, right through dormancy in fall. Also, be sure to provide "wind est tubs the budget can afford. They'll need every bit of root anchoring space they can find.

For city garden spots where space is in short supply, vines and climbers come to the rescue. Boston ivy will cling by itself to a rough brick wall and is in its glory in the fall when its leaves turn red. The silver lace vine or a sweet smelling honeysuckle, both summer bloomers, will quickly twine themselves around a variety of problem fences. Fast growing summer vines include tha aptly named morning glory or a moonvine for cocktail hour flowers. Cucumbers can also be helped to grow on a fence as will my favorite, hardy edible grapes.

For some of the narrow spots on my terrace, I've attached various climbing roses. Two of these. Blaze and Golden Showers, have proved themselves fairly tolerant of shade as well. The most beautiful flowers though, are the deep velvety red shades of my climbing Don Juan. This plant continues to surprise us with flowers for cutting right up to the first space in tight city gardens is to use plants with flexibla branches, which can be trained to grow flat. I've done thia in ona corner with a firethorn shrub, using strong plastic ties and nails. While the older branches of this plant are quite stiff and rigid, the young ones are flexible enough to bend and place however I choose, which includes right past the railing and out over the street. This is a wonderfully versatile plant with its late spring flowers which become vibrant or ange, with bird-attracting fall berries. Here in New York City, it is also semi-evergreen so its small green leaves remain on view all winter long. I might add here too, that its long and nasty thorns are also a wonderful way of discouraging potential

Roses, annuals, evergreens and selected berries will thrive on the sunny city terrace with minimum maintenance

Plants Need Some Nutritional Push to Make Them Thrive

Understanding the complicated process of plant nutrition sometimes boggles the beginner's mind. This summary by Cooperative Extension of the main elements in fertilizers explains what they do for the plants that receive them.

NITROGEN:

Of tha three elements in commercial fertilizers, nitrogen has the quickest and most pronounced effect. It tends to eocourage aboveground vegetative growth and to give the leaves a deep green color. It also acts as a regulator of the utilization of potassium, phosphorus and other constituents. Plants receiving insufficient nitrogen are stunted in growth and have restricted root systems. The leaves turn yellow green and tend to drop off. The addition of available nitrogen will cause a remarkable change, indicative of the unusual activity of this element within the plant

Unfortunately, excessive amounts of nitrogen, or nitrogen applied at tha improper time can cause harmful or undesirable effects in plants. An excess of nitrogen may inhibit flowering and fruiting and may delay maturation or ripening of fruit by encouraging excessive vegetative growth. This occurs quita often with tomato plants. Nitrogen may also decreasa resistance of plants

PHOSPHORUS:

Phosphorus is important for proper growth and development of plants. A fairly large amount of phosphorus is present in soils, but it is not water soluble or available to plants.

Phosphorus is necessary for proper plant growth as it affects cell division, flowering and frulting, crop maturation, root development and

The phosphorus content of a bag of fertilizer will be found as the middla number. For example, if the fertilizer analysis is 10-6-4, the "six" represents 6 percent of the contents as being phosphate. POTASSIUM:

Potassium, the third element on the fertilizer bag, is necessary for the carbohydrate productioo and translocation in plants. It is needed for root crops. In many typea of soil, the potassium present is mainly in insolubla forms. Soils high in clay content are also high in available potassium.

Nitrogen, phosphorus and potash are the big three for good growth

Symptoms of potassium atunted deficiency are growth and poorly developed roots and tubers. The older or lower leaves show chlorosis (yellowings) and burning in the leaf margins. Deficiencies are in the older leaves because the potassium moves from the older to the younger leaves as short ages occur.

Many elements other than nitrogen, phosphorus and potassium are needed by plants. Soma of these are found in complete fertilizers in combination with nitrogen, phosphorus or potassium. Many others are present in available forms in the soil and usually don't have to be added. They include calcium, sulfur, magnesium, boron, iron, manganese, zinc, molybdenum and

Intensive Vegetable Growing

Serious gardeners are just that, deeply involved in their art and interested in ways to better and improve results. This bettering and improving usually involves the soil, where plants get their start. And since vegetable gardening has become the hig thing, there is renewed interest in soil care. Experience is teaching gardeners that the better the condition of the soil, the better the growth eod yields of their crops.

Which brings us to a type of vegetable gardening that has its roots in ancient Chinese and Greek agriculture dating back some 3,000 years. It has gone through several interpretations and practices and has come out in a new format called Biodynamic/French intensive gardening. To put it simply, this is a mathod of leogthy soil preparation which permits vegetables to be grown in raised beda while planted very close to each other iostead of io regimented rows. The results according to those who follow this method is increased yields-fourfold.

The underlying secret appears to be untred ground. That is the soil where the vegetables grow is never walked on but continuously airy and fertile, draining well and concentrating soil nutrieots where the plants need them. As the plents mature (they are planted close together in a bexagonal pattern so their leaves nearly touch), they form a mini-climate and cooling effect.

The soil preparation theory is that enriched loose soil will enable roots to grow deeply with a steady supply of nourishmeot available to them with adequate moisture all the time. Stooes, clods and rocks are removed and the vegetables just grow! The raised beds are terraced inward slightly so that there is never any water run-off.

The ground preparation for inteosive gardening is not for the lazy gardener. Practitioners warn that It may take anywhere from 6 to 12 man hours to prepare each 100 square feet of bed. (Bot once the big preparation is completed, this time is redoced each year to practically no preparation.)

The gardeo is spaded first to a depth of one foot. Rest a day. Theo double digging begins. This method involves plenty of muscle. A two foot trench (ideally), one foot (passable) is dug at one eod of the garden area. The soil from it is carried to the other end of the bed. Then a second trench is dug and soil from it ie put into the first trench and so on until the end. The pile at the edge of the garden is then used to fill in the last treoch. All the time this double digging is going on a thick layer of well rotted manure is being worked ioto the soil. Rest another day. Then fork io bonemeal, wood ashes and other organic fertilizer materials indicated by soil tests.

The beds are always kept narrow so they cao be worked from either side, four to five feet Is about right. Length depends on the size of the crop. The mixing of the maoures and organic fertilizers starts the soll working and enriches the microbial activity so that in future yeers the ground is cootinually renewed with manures, composts and nutrieot content is intensified. Also the water holding capacity of the soil is increased.

There is no foot traffic where the vegetables grow, only around the perimeter of the raised beds. Because the heds are small and compact, there is no need for planting rows. The vegetables can be tended by reaching in from either side of the beds.

This sort of gardening was practiced in France by truck gardeners in the early part of the 19th century to provide fine produce for Paris merkets. These farmers were famous for their melons and succulent root crops.

A similar form of gardening took root in this country in the 1960's in Senta Cruz, Calif., when Alan Chadwick, an amateur gardener, developed a four-acre student organic garden at the University of California. He chose a hillside where even the weeds did not thrive.

Chadwick's theories include some of the hiodynamic techniques of Rudolf Steiner, Austrian philosopher of the 1920's who practiced organic gardening, soil improvement and hlended it with a hit of astrology and planting hy phases of the moon. Chadwick incorporated some of the Steiner philosophy with some of the French market gardeoer's intensive methods and mede the original Santa Cruz hillside garden work. His results were remarkable in a short period of time and attention getting. In the 1970's the city of Palo Alto began to hold public classes on this method as taught by one of Chadwick's apprentices aod the city nature department.

A book evolved from all this learning and it is possibly the most detailed explanation of the intensive gardening method available. Entitled "How to Grow More Vegetables than you ever thought possible on less land thao you can imagine" and written by John Jeavons, it is available for $4 from Ecology Action of the Midpeninsule, 3225 El Camino Real, Palo Alto, Calif. 94306.

Answers/Questions

AZALEA/RHODODENDRON SEED (March 7) G. K., Greenwich, Conn., has a quantity of Exbury azalea and rhododendron seeds and be asked when and how to plant them. Seeds of both evergreens can be sown in a similar manner. Planting can begin any time now. The seed does not require a cold period (stratification). The seed is very fine and is best shown in shallow flat or plostic shoe boxes with drainage holes punched in the bottom with a hot ice pick. Place a mixture of sterilized soil and peat moss (equal parts) and come sand in the bottom of the container and fill to one inch from the top. Sieve sphagnum moss over the top of a depth of one-half inch and moisten well by placing the seed pan in a tub of warm water which will seep up through the drainage holes. Dust the fine seed over the top when fully moist and insert the seed pan in a plastic bag. The seeds need warmth to germinate in about three to four weeks. They can be grown under fluorescent light or in a sunny window until mid-spring when they can be transplanted outdoors to a coldframe or protected nursery bed. The seedlings should remain through their first winter undisturbed in this sita with adequate winter protection. Transplant to the permanent site in the second year. Ed. GROUNDCOVERS/PETS (MARCH 7)

Mrs. F.S., Peekskill, N.Y. asked if groundcovers such as pachysandra, myrtle and ivy would be poisonous to their pet dog if they chose to plant these groundcovers in their small yard. Stantey Goldfein, a Manhattan reader, points out, "English ivy (Hedera helix) is considered poisonous to humans and cattle have been poisoned after . ingestion of a considerable quantity. Pachysandra, and vinca are not poisonous. There are many excellent references in the libary on poisonous plants which can be referred to,"

A Guide for Grape Grower Pand

By NELSON SHAULIS

IDE NEW IURA TIMES, SUMUAL, MARCH 21, 1970

Grapes are the most important fruit crop in the world. There is no reason why home gardeners cannot successfully grow dessert grapes.

Too often, people are disappointed when they plant grapevines. Failures are the result of I the wrong variety for the site; 2 an inadequate program for control of pests and diseases. 3 the basic steps in grapevine care are not carried out.

There are three basic types

What to Plant

of grape varieties grown in New York European (or Californie) grapes which have fruit with an adherent, edible skin and usually neutral flavor are poorly adapted to our growing conditions. They lack resistance to fungus diseases and can be damaged by cold when the temperature falls to-5°F. American varieties have fruity flavors, a tough "slipskin" offer a degree of resistance to the fungus diseases and willusually endure temperatures as low as -20°F. Tha hestknown American grape variety is Concord. The third category is Europo-American hybrids, produced by crossing European grapes with American varieties. They have characters intermediate between their parents, edible, more or less adherent skins, less fruitness, and moderate resistance to fungus attack. They generally may be grown eafely where the winter temperatures are not below -12°F.

Which type to grow? Choice depends on the site, preference in taste and willingness to deal with prob lems. There are oo troublefree · grapevines. They all must be sprayed and cared

Where to Plant

Grapevines will grow hest if they are planted outside the shade of buildings or trees and grown at a locally elevated site so that water and cold air will not accumulate.

Stock and Its Care

Usually grapevines from the oursery are rooted cuttings. They should be stored to prevent drying of the roots and kept cold (32° to 40°F).

Nelson Shaulis is professor of grape culture, New York State Agriculturol Experiment Station, Genevo.

The vine growth in the first month after planting is dependent on the amount of reserves in the vine. For this reasoo, ohtain large vines and retain all the live roots hy moist storage. Do not prune off any live roots. Before planting, the top of the vines can be primed to only one straight cane, to a length of 10 to fifteen inches. An alternata is to retain only the biggest cane pruned to three

A test of the six-inches surface of the soil is useful in identifying a low potas-sium or magnesium. Remove peremial weeds. Do not lime.

Planting Plant in epring, as early April. Row spacing should be eight or more feet; the vines in the row can vary from six to ten feet.

The hole for each vice should be large enough for the roots without crowding. Vine roots are two to three feet loog so prepare a deep hole that is 10 ioches wide and 30 inches long and 10 to 14 inches deep. If the vine is grafted, the graft union should be about two inches above the soil eurface. To conserve moisture and suppress weeds, mulch a three-foot wide strip along the row.

For hest growth and production, a vertical trellis ahout six feet high is preferred. Post spacing may he 24 feet. Six vines spaced eight feet in the row, require three posts; each eight feet long and extending six feet above the soil surface. Wood posts should be pressure treated. Attach a galvanized No. 9 gauge wire at a height of three to three and ooe-half by spraying with penetrating oil.

Metal furniture, or furniture with metal frames, will generally fall into two categories-wrought iron or steel that is painted, and aluminum that is not painted. Steel or iroo needs to be protected against rusting with paiot, so bare spots should be touched up promptly-first with a metal primer, then with the finish coat.

If rust spots are already evident, these should be scraped to the bare metal with steel wool or a wire brush, or the rust should be takeo off with a prepared rust remover (sold in all hardware stores), then paint applied over the clean metal. Painting directly over rust will only make matters worse, since the rust will continue to spread under the paint where it cannot be seen -until it finally causes the paint to flake off.

Aluminum furniture theoretically needs no paint, but the metal does tend to pit and oxidize-especially near salt water. To retain its origginal lustre the metal should be polished once a year with a metal polish made for aluminum, theo given a good coat of paste wax. Frequent cleaning also belps since clean metal does not oxidize or pit as rapidly as dirty metal. If the aluminum has been neglected for several years and is badly pitted, then the simplest solution is to rub with fice steel wool or bronze wool until it is clean and reasonably smooth -then wipe down with paint thinner or dry cleaning fluid and finish with paste wax. Redwood furniture is quite popular in many parts of the country, and stands up quite well even when left out all year. However, to keep the wood clean and retain its original attractive color, it is a good idea to apply a redwood sealer at least once a year. These are penetrating finishes that soak in and seal the wood to help it repel moisture (which can cause splitting nr checking) and keep it from absorbing dirt and other stains. However, for best results, be sure the edges and end grain of each piece are coated, including the bottom of each leg.

Use a wrench to check bolts and a large screwdriver to check screws, to maka certain all joints are tight. Unfortunately, redwood itself is fairly impervious to weather, many manufacturers fail to use screws and other hardware that are equally resistant to attack by moisture. They sometimes use inexpensive coated metal bardware that rusts badly after only one or two seasons. This not only causes unsightly rust stains to eat their way ioto the wood and thus mar the appearance of the furniture, it can also lead to early breakdowns. To prevent this rusty hard-

The "commission type" payments were made almost entirely to "middle and lower ecbelon employees" foreign governments and agencies, the company said, Merck explained its payments as "accustomed business practice in many of the countries involved," and the other companies have said much the same. Perhaps of even greater pervasiveness than direct pay-offs are the dubious pricing practices born of Europe's splin-tered regulatory pattern and sometimes stringent price controls.

Merck, it has been learned, quietly agreed in 1973 to pay the Freoch governmeot nearly $10 million in "redressment" after being accused of charging excessive prices for one of its products. The abuses of the spirit, if not the letter, of European law are generally explained as rising from the strains of dealing with the massive administrative machinery that governs the market, while striving to defend or to stake out a piece of what is expected to be a $12 billion-a-year business by

Most of the European population is covered by some form of national medical insurance, which finances not only drugs-about half of total sales in most countries—but, also doctor and bospital fees and allied charges. Coverage ranges from 75 percent of the population to the Netherlands to oearly 100 percent in West Germany and Britain. In Britain and West Germany the insurance funds pay 100 percent of prescription drug charges. In France, Belgium, Italy and the Netherlands, the medical iosurance covers only drugs on an approved list.

Those who have worked in the European drug business classify Italy and Spain as the countries where the most flagrant anything-for-a-sale abuses take place. West Germany and France sre put somewhere in the middle in this rough categorization, and Britain and the Netherlands are said to be "cleanest."

Ministry of Health officials in Italy concede that instal ar practices have occurred there, but they insist that controls are being tightened to prevent their

In France, a ranking officer of the drug industry association states that it is "inconceivable" that there are irregular practices in his country, esserting that French manufacturers look on such practices "with utmost contempt."

A French Health Ministry official also expressed doubt that bribery took place, for the very reason that there are so many functionaries involved in administering the controls.

Notwithstanding these assertions, many sources described various practices that might be questioned.

In Italy, according to a former com-pany executive who worked there for years, a dozen drug manufacturers, including some American companies, oce baoded together to back ao indus-try-sponsored bill in the Italian Parliament that would have allowed manufacturers to sell their nonprescription products in supermarkets and other retail outlets. There, they would no longer be subjected to price control.

The companies were assessed $80,000 each, according to the source, with the $1 million to be put into a war chest of the Christian Democratic party.

The Government fell before the hill could be enacted, and it could oot be determined definitely wbether mooey actually changed hands. But the in-formant said it "undoubtedly" had. Again in Italy, according to a source familiar with the situation, one multioational company got authority, after bribing fiscal inspectors, to sell throat lozenges—at import prices—that it then arranged to make locally at low cost. The practice was said to have continued for around 15 years in the 1950's and 1960's before the company decided it should "regularize" its position. Another industry source said "bribes"

$11 billion in REIT bank loans is beld by the nation's 10 largest banks, with sever-al bundred other banks sharing the remainder.

Until about two years ago, when the real estate market began showing serious signs of collapsing, banks and in-vestors viewed realty trusts as sitractive new vehicles for expanding real estate development — and reaping good profits. REIT's are taxexempt as long as 90 percent of their earnings are paid out as dividends, which are taxable to the shareowners. Most of the trusts were formed in the past eight years and by 1974 had placed more than $20 billion, or 20 percent, of all construction loans, made that year. Until their problems set in REIT's borrowed money from banks, releot it to developers at bigher interest rates, and made their money on the spread between the two. To supplement bank loans, which were considered senior debt, REIT's also raised money through private stock, called subordinate or junior debt.

When times were prosper-ous, most REIT's were able to make their payments to banks promptly. But when times went sour, and borrowers from the REIT's began to defaolt on payments, a chain reaction occurred. Many REIT's are still unable to pay bank debts at the original terms and still pay junior debt on time. "I think there is a stiffer attitode developing on the part of some banks that in the past perhaps they gave up too much of their own position in order to keep the REIT's from insulvency," said William E. Pike, chairman of the credit committee of the Morgan Guaranty Trust Company.

"We haven't pushed any-body into bankruptcy and doo't intend to," Mr. Pike continued, "but we also doo't intend to agree to ar-rangements that are not io the baok's interest." Several bankers interviewed recently about their REIT involvement echoed Mr. Pike's sentiments. From the REIT's point of view, the sbift in bankers' thinking has been painful. Morgan, which at the end Morgan, which at the end of 1975 had $257 million in Toans outstanding to realty trusts, was cited earlier this month by Continental Mort-gage Investora as one of the banks that figured prom-mently into its decision to file for protection from its creditors under Chapter XI of the Federal Bankruptcy Act.

Morgan was one of 25 bank 103 that refused to sign a credit agreement with Continental which trust officials said would have extended the life of the REIT and giveo it a better chance to work out its portfolio prob-lems without the interference of the courts.

Continental owed more than $500 million to its bank creditors at the time of the bankruptcy filing, Among the more prominent of those refusing to sign the new credit accord were Morgan, to whom Continental owed $6.7 million; the Bank of America, $10.6 million, and the Crock-er National Bank, $21.8 mil-

The bankruptcy, filing by Continental, the nation's second largest realty trust beMortgage and Realty Trust, was only the highlight of a series of developments between the banks and REIT's that signaled a shift in bank posture.

IDS Realty Trust in Minneapolls has received three aeparate demands in recent days for immediate payment of loans totaling $30 million. It has threatened to file bankruptcy proceedings un-less the demands—from the Bank of Montreal, the Crock-er National Bank and the First National Bank of St. Paul which last Friday sued to collect its money - are

Economic Imbalance in Europe

By PAUL KEMEZIS

THE NEW YORK TIMES, SUNDAY, MARCH 21, 1976

BRUSSELS - An intense bout of monetary turbulence in the last two weeks fluschanges and raised basic questinns about the cohesion of the Common Market.

The joint European currency float was severely set back by the decision of the French just one week ago to again cut ties with the other monies and float free. That reduced the "European ooce again, to a Deutschmark bloc with justfive members.

While nnt a decisive facet of European cooperation, the joint float has become a benchmark of progress towards economic harmonization inside the community. The currency turbulence, then, raised doubts about the spirit of economic solidarity among the nine community member countries.

The drastic downward plunges of first the Italian lira and then British pound seemed to many Europeans to have been engineered or at least permitted by the hard-pressed governments in Rome and London. No one could deny the actions were well suited to encourage export-led economic recoveries in these countries at a competitive cost to their European partners.

When these moves led to pressure on the French franc, and its eventual float out of the 4.5 percent fluctuation margin permitted in the joint European system, French Finance Minister Jean-Pierre Fourcard was not sparing in criticism of the British for "wild" devaluation.

- France had become the target of the speculators because of doubts about the strength of its economic recovery compared that in Germany, the other main joint-float country.

The Freoch, who bad rejoined the joint float just eight mnnths ago, took the politically embarrassing step of quitting only after its attempts to arrange a set of exchange rate shifts inside the Europeao group floun-dered on Dutch objection.

The 5 percent fall of the pnund sterling in ooe week, after three months of stability, came as a surprise mainly because of its suddenness. Many housewives will respond to this difference by buying more poultry and less steak, thus stemming an erosion of the value of their food buying dollar. Yet, the index will reflect only the upward march of meat pri-

The index has other faults as well. Many times the B.L.S. shoppers fail to pick up weekly specials. Thus, food prices in general tend to show up higher in the index than they may actually be. And there is the problem . of adjusting for quality changes. If a product's price goes up, bul its quality is improved, part or all of that price increase may be "adjusted out" by B.L.S. statisticians—if they are able to make a determination as to the extent of the quality ionmnbiles, this might be easy, especially in recent years with the inclusion of Jafesy devices and air pollution control equipment. But in smal-ler consumer products, and many services, it is very dif-ficult to isolate the extent of improvement in quality. Also, new products are introduced frequently which bear little resemblance to pro-ducts already on the market, thus posing another problem for B.L.S. technicians.

does have nne big thing go-ing for it—the fact that it is a "transactions" index; which means that it measures price changes at the actual point of sale. Thus, it gives an up-to-date reading of the state of inflation in the U.S. economy. Needless to say, such a sensitive reading of inflation trends is of vital importance to policymakers. At the moment, the consumer price index is continuing to show progress on the inflation front. February's 0.1 percent increase in the index was the smallest monthly rise since September 1971. Over the past year, prices have climbed 6.5 percent-the smallest 12month increase since August.

If you hanker for numbers like these now, turn to the wholesale price index. Feb-ruary's decline in the wholesale index means that wholesale prices have either declined or remained unchanged for four consecutive months—the longest such period in about a year. Over the past year, the wbolesala price index has gone up 1.7 percent, higher than the average annual iocrease of 1.2 percent posted during the 1960's, but a lot less than the 23.7 percent posted during the twelve months ending Nov. 1974.

coverage of the wholesale index was subsequently broadened to the point where the number of commodities now measured is about 2,700, based on 9,000 price quotations. And whereas the wholesale index was first considered a general-purpose sidered representative mainly of "primary market" price changes. In other words, the index is designed to measure prices at levels in primary markets for instance, the price of steel at the mill or more subject to negotiation than before. It takes only a brief period of slackered demand for a businessman to accommodate his customers by offering such inducements to buy as discounts, warehousing, extended payment periods and so forth. But it would require a period of sustaioed sluggishness for a businessman to take so drastic a step as to cut his list price. Little wonder that the wholesale price index contioued to rise during the first nine months of the 1973-1975 recession, flatteoing out and declining relatively lale in the cycle. The wholesale price index also suffers-in the same way as the consumer indexfrom the fixed-weight method of calculating the relative importance of commodi-ties. The weights are established from data obtained industrial censuses, which are infrequent, and, in any event become effective with a lag. Another failing of the wholesale index is that it makes no allowance for changes in the rela-tive proportion of commodities used when their prices

While there would not seem to be that much of a difference between list and transactions prices most times in the business cycle, at certain times this difference can be crucial. When the economy slips into recesslon, list prices become change at different rates.

Not all government price indexes have fixed weights. The gross national product price deflator, sometimes called the G.N.P. price index. price has weights that change each quarter in proportion to estimated consumption patterns that exist in the current quarter. Thus changes in buying habits, for whatever the reason, tend to be reflected

index than in other indexes.

This alone would seem to make the G.N.P. price index a belter measure of inflation than either the consumer or wholesale price indexes. However, the G.N.P. price index is also broader than either of the other two-in fact, it depends on price series that are components of the consumer and wholesale price indexes, among other indexes. And until about ten years ago, the G.N.P. price index was the only one that was adjusted for regularly recurring seasonal patterns.

However, even the G.N.P. price index has its faults. For one thing, it is quarterly, whereas the consumer and wholesale price indexes are monthly. Thus, price developments, appear with a con-

the assemblers of the G.N.P. price index do not gather the price information themselves, but use data compiled by other agencies. This information sometimes is not ideally suited to the statistical system whithin which the G.N.P. price index is used.

The G.N.P. deflator also does not give a good reflec-tion of the effects of quality changes nor the frequent emergence of new products. And there is insufficient detail in the G.N.P. price index once you get to the industry

Like the consumer and wholesale price indexes the G.N.P. price index has been portraying a picture of slow-ing inflation. In the fourth quarter, the latest period for which quarterly data are available, the G.N.P. price index rose at an 6.8 percent annual rate compared with a 13.4 percent clip a year

Thus, other than the varying inflation rates, it can seen that all three major price indexes do agree that inflation has slowed dramatically from its peak of 1974. The big question now is which, if any of these, should be watched to determine whether and when inflation will reignite. To get the earliest warning, economists look at yet a fourth index. It is not so widely known as the others. but is nevertheless a good advance indiator of trends-the Bureau of Labor Statistics' weekly measure of spot market prices. Consisting of nine major footstuffs categories and 13 industrial commodities,—wool off the sbeep and zioc at the mine. for instance — It satisfies many of the requirements lacking in the other indexes. For one thing, it appears frequeotly—every week, to be exact. For another, it covers a broad grouping of commodities, and, since there is no weighting procedure, there are none of the deficiencies associated with attempts to fix the relative importance of these commodities. Of course, an unweighted index has its problems too, being susceptible to movements by components which have a larger dollar value. However, economists feel it makes up for this through its sensitivity to changes in supply and demand conditions, changes which reliably predict price developments in the economy, weeks—if not mooths—ahead of the retail price movement. A look at the test index (which is published in the financial pages of The New York Times every week), gives no reason to be concerned over the immediate outlook for inflation, indus-trial materials prices have climbed a bit from their recent lows, but are still 21 percent below the peaks they reached in April 1974. Foodstuffs prices are down even more from their 1974 bighs and are no bigher today than they were in the summer of 1973.

This spot commodity index has other uses as well. The industrial component buttomed in early Dec. 1974, several months in advance of the overall economy. Thus, it signalled that the recession would soon end—as it did four months later.

Of course, it is possible to look even further ahead examining futures prices in an effort to divine inflation trends. But futures prices tend to get caught up in speculation arising from daily rumors which may or may not be founded in fact. The most receot example of this is the word that a drought in the Great Plains and Western states would seriously deplete the winter wheat crop. This caused wheat futures to jump in price, carrying prices of oth-er grains along with them. However, rains have since fallen, and the crop has yet to be harvested. As one wag has said "each year we tend to kill the wheat crop six times before it gets into the storage bin." Thus, all available iodicators suggest that inflation at the retail level has scant chance of flaring up in the months immediately ahead; iodeed, the rate of consumer price increases may well moderate further. Whether this surcease will mark the eod of our prolonged battle with inflation or merely a hiatus in a long-run trend of rising prices will depend on Washington's willingness to reduce and eventually eliminale the deficit in the federal budget. But if there is another slipup to economic policy, and price pressures are reawakened, it is bound to show up first in the sensitive spot commodity index.

Contingency Planning in]

By DOUGLAS W. CRAY

PROVIDENCE, R.L.—While the governors of Massa-chusetts and Connecticut have, in the aftermath of the New York City and State fiscal crises, found it necessary to publicly journey to Wall Street assuring bond buyers and sellers of their commonwealths' soundness, Gov. Philip William Noel of Phode Island has stayed put.

Rhode Island has stayed put.
Instead of junketing to the money market center, Governor Noel is attempting with to make sure that his state is at least prepared for the contingencies now being wrestled with in New York.

The Governor, who majored in economics at Brown University, class of '54, has formally introduced legislation designed, in his words, "to deal with financial emergencies of local municipalities." He has said that he believes such troubles aren't likely in Rhode Island's municipalities."

But "the New York City case has," he said, "brought to light the responsibility of higher levels of government to respond to such emergencies as well as the statutory and administrative mechanisms designed to prevent such occurrences."

"It is imperative that we he prepared before, rather than after the fact," the 44year-old Democrat said. The proposed legislation would:

¶Establish a clear state policy in cases of local government financial emergencies so a crisis may be detected early and remedied with a minimum amount of state intervention:

An interview with Gilbert F. Richards, Chairman of the Board and Chief Executive Officer, The Budd Company.

The economy dished out some pretty rough times for all of us. It's still not over. But it's getting better, little by little. However, we're not waiting. This is one company that's been pushing for better times.

The first quarter of 1975 was bad news. Fortunately, I can say our results for each quarter have become successively better. And that's in spite of the worst recession since the 1930's. And that's in spite of the lowest sales by the automotive industry in more than a decade.

And I can tell you, too, although our sales were down 8 percent, our pre-tax earnings of $15.7 million exceeded the pre-tax earnings of $14.7 million in 1974. Basically, our picture is a fairly decent one for

Basically, our picture is a fairly decent one for two reasons: first, we had prepared ourselves. With lower operating costs. With more efficiencies. And with old and new market expansions. Second, the economy got better and our sales started growing

Over the past two years alone, we've invested some $63 million in plant equipment and special tools. This includes two new foundry plants, one in Mexico, the other, an all-electric one, in Wisconsin. We also examined our balance sheet upside down and backwards to find ways to improve it. And we did, so we have much greater financial flexibility. Our research and development activities are moving full speed ahead. And on worthwhile projects. We pushed into other markets. Our international capability is on the upswing especially with new developments in the Middle East.

Here are some other encouraging things that came our way this past year. Our Railway Division is delivering, on schedule, 492 brand new railcars for AMTRAK. And another 300 car order to Sao Paulo and Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, was started. This order includes both subway and suburban railcars. Some interesting rail opportunities have also been opening up in the Middle East.

At the end of 1975, Gindy Mfg. Corporation

At the end of 1975, Gindy Mfg. Corporation officially became the Trailer Division of The Budd Company. We're looking for growth here. We have customers as far away as the Middle East, the Caribbean, Europe. Scandinavia, South Africa and Australia for our trailers, containers and container chassis. And to keep our good customers and attract new ones, the division is already husy with the introduction of a new line of products. We believe this year will be much better for this new family addition.

There's good news about our plastics operations, as well. Though plastics sales were down to '75, this end of our business continues to look strong because more and more lightweight engineered plastic products are needed in the many end product areas we supply, including automobiles and trucks. In West Germany, hospital directors take gifts and even money from large West German drug concerns, and probably others, in return for placing pharmaceutical supply contracts with thoe companies, a source close to conditions there reported. The source, who is French, insisted that the practice was not so widespread in France be-cause of the more closely controlled centralized purchasing network of the public assistance hoapitals.

In all countries the drug industry argues that prices must be high enough to gen-erate the profits needed to fund basic research.

But in France, for one,

the industry spends twice as much on sales and promo-tion as on basic research. Counted as promotional expenses, here and else-where, are free trips for doctors and their wives to com-pany-sponsored conferences at pleasant places.

Winthrop Laboratories of Britain has an annual sympo-sium at Deanville. Servier Laboratories of France runs an annual conference at Mégève. Abbott Laboratories and Richardson-Merrell, both American, have held confer-

French Social Security system, found in an analysis by her department that be-cause of the rather vague orders written by doctors, such as "take according to need," pharmacists tended to deliver maximum quantities of even very toxic drugs.

In Italy, the number of drugs refundable by the main government insurance or-ganization, was cut to 6,000 from 16,000 in 1972.

All countries are more severely scrutinizing the "me too" products, those with essentially the same therapeu-tic characteristics of existing

"All the companies do it," said one former executive of an American company. Another former executive, a Frenchman, observed: "It's Frenchman, observed: "It's what could be expected from unrealistic and excessively stringent price controls." Some companies shunt their raw materials around a European circuit, establishing higher prices at each point, before actually marketing a finished product. Frequently, the only change involved is, say, a transfer of the "materials" into different-sized containers for sale in the final market as "finished product.'

Two Paris laboratories buy their vitamin B-12 from a producer in the Paris region. But, according to one report here, the substance is sent to Antwerp, Geneva, Ham-burg and Monaco hefore returning to Paris. Prices triple or quadruple during the 1,000-mile trip.

The difficulty in administering price controls lies in figuring the real element in the transfer price of raw materials.

Merck, for example, paid France the nearly $10 million after customs officials found it was charging higher than transfer prices for indomethacin, a raw material for Indocid 25, a drug used for rheumatism and gout.

The authorities occasionally clamp down on price con-trol abuse, as seen in the case of Merck. But most experts agree that the problems are likely to continue at least until free trade conditions exist in the European Economic Community.

There has been little snccess in attempts to work out common legal framework for drugs, providing for automatic recognition in all nine member states of drugs registered in any one of

The larger international corporations "are not totally displeased with the present situation," according to a report by Euroeconomics, the economic research arm of Eurofinance, a body spon-sored by leading banks in North America, Japan and Western Europe.

It said that "internationalization would probably result in alignment of E.E.C. prices on the lowest prevailing na-tional price." Now, the companies can exploit the control weaknesses of each national market.

Britain and West Germany have taken well publicized steps to get prices of certain widely marketed drugs low-er. The monopolies commissions in both nations have struck at Hoffmann-La Roche's librium and valium compounds, and the German trustbusters have also attacked the price of Merck's vitamin B-12.

West German authorities also disclosed that they have been "observing" Wyeth Lab-oratories of Marietta, Pa., for possible price infractions on vitamin B-12.

"It is quite likely that West Germany will become one of the leaders in Europe in checking abusive drug pri-ces," said the Euroeconomics study—if the courts uphold the monopoly commission's

West Germany—the only major country in Europe without price controls—has a medicare system of pre-scription monitoring that is being watched with interest elsewhere. Individual doctors' pre-scriptions are tallied at the end of each year. Therapeutic profiles for the more common sicknesses have been drawn up. Doctors whose prescriptions are above accepted norms are asked to explain discrepancies to a medical committee and are subjected to punitive action if over-prescribing practices continue.

Government agencies control production of drugs in Europe, but nowhere on the continent are the formalities as rigorous, complex, and time consuming as in the United States. For instance, it took Fisons, a British company, seven years to get its intal, an anti-bronchial medication, approved by American authorities, even after registration was granted in Britain. In France, where requirements are strict but application may be lax, the companies themselves finance the testing of new drugs for the Ministry of Health permit, a procedure that would seem to invite conflicts of interest.

The testing in France is "badly done," say Jean-Pierre Dupuy and Serge Karsenty, two medically oriented French sociologists in a recent book entitled "The Pharmaceutical invasion."

"The fact that the tests are paid for by the compa-nies may not be without in-fluence in the matter," they write. "To the director of a hospital section, this financial support is often a windfall that permits him to bet-ter equip his facilities, and he is evidently little inclined to be exacting in his [testing]

Alexandre Minkowski, a distinguished Paris pediatrician, disclosed in an intercian, disclosed in an interview one example of the possible dangers that may result.

A leading European-based multinational, be reported, got approval to market in France a powdered milk for premature babies that risked retarding the infants' mental development because among other things it was too rich in amino acids.

Some of the most aggressive and forward-looking corporations in America and Europe are currently unonvering new plus profit opportunities in entirely new business areas. Others are finding important new mail order markets for well-established products. Here are seven case-history examples from the files of Maxwell Sroge!

A giant U.S. packaged goods manufacturer found the 1 • government clamping down on its acquisition plans. As an alternative to acquisition, their corporate development people joined forces with Maxwell Sroge Company to create several new business entries in the mail order

All of these entries were in areas completely divorced from the client's traditional package goods business. Yet all of them generated results that can only be described as precedent-setting."

2 A multi-billion dollar foreign manufacturer approached Maxwell Sroge Company about creating new U.S. distribution channels outside the existing retail structure. Today, three mail order programs are in active operation and are selling ten times as much of one product line by mail as was previously sold through all U.S. retail outlets. All three businesses were conceived and operated through pilot stages by Maxwell Sroge

As a result, the parent company has engaged Maxwell Sroge Company to perform a similar function on behalf of another division.

A consumer durable goods division of one of the 6. largest U.S. corporations had a problem with a product they couldn't move at retail. A direct marketing

Most of his major cases have lovolved efforts by corporate managements to run up the price of their companies' stock-or to keep it from fallingthrough misrepresentation or outright fraudulent reporting to sbareholders.

In many cases, he said, "you see the same pattern time and time again, fictitious sales and expenses, deferring evuenses, failure to record proper exall tailored to give the illusion profitability that doesn't exist.

"It takes hard work, and it can take hundreds of thousands of dollars to prepare a case," he said. And, he noted that companies that try to get away with securities law violations are often sophisticated and have taken great pains to hide their misbehavior.

"He's a very tough guy who works hard, and he knows business," said one lawyer of the Securities and Exchange Commission. To some extent, this lawyer said, Mr. Gold—or any successful practitioner in the field must combine the talents of very good accountant with that of a hard-nosed detective, as well as being a good

Mr. Gold believes that the S.E.C. cannot do a really effective job in policing all securities violations. "I think they do a good job considering their budget and staff," he said, "but with the load they've got, it's impossible to do everything that oeeds doing, and that's where the private bar comes

When I was young, in my early 20's, I had great faith in our government and its administrative agencies. I thought they provided an effective balance to protect both public and private interests in the economy.

"Then, I began to notice how many of the administrative agencies worked.... with a constant shift of people between

Mr. Gold said he took some cases in the field to the late 1960's and soon found himself a specialist in the late agencies that were supposed to regulate" business weren't doing their jobs because they are so lograined."

Even with the recent interest in class actioo suits against busioess, he says that the victims of corporate crime seldom recover all their losses. In some cases, the lawyer said, crimes are discovered after the assets are gone. And in others it just becomes impractical to retrieve all of the losses.

He said that misrepresentation of profits by Mattel, by running up the stock prices in 1971 and 1972, probably cost shareholders "in excess of $100 million-at least." This is the difference between the amount of money they paid for Mattel shares or were given credit for in acquisitions by the company, and the value of the shares after the fradulent reports were discovered.

"But there's a limit to what you can get." he said, referring to the record $30 million Mattel settlement. "You walk away with a judgment of $100 million or $200 million; what are you going to do with it. You probably can't collect it; the company has to fold: and you may put 4,000 or 5,000 people out of work.

Mr. Gold lives in a large, traditionally styled San Francisco house with his wife and four children, who range in age from 12 to 19. He jogs four miles most days, plays tennis once or twice a week, goes skiing when he has time, and sails his 28-foot sailboat on San Francisco Bay-when he's not working.

The attorney will oot say how much money he has made from his peculiar hrand of alchemy, turning greed into Gold; but he says: "I woo't mislead you. I'm doing pretty well." The shareholder suits generally, he said, are taken on a contingency basis, and the fees are

The antitlement program has craated considerable controversy, particularly with regard to residual oil and "the Hess advantage."

Hass, being on United States territory, brings foreign oil to the American market and receives an entitlement. Other refiners in the Caribbean, not on United States territory, do not get entitlements:

Hess is reported to have received almost $400 million in entitlements so far, which has allowed it to undersell its competitors on the East Coast and increase its share of the market considerably. The Federal Eoergy Admin-

While the Dow each day moves up or down by so many points, it remains in a real sense an assembly of 30 big stocks, each marching to the sound of its own drimmer.

Earlier this month, U.S. Steel and Bethlehem Steel sold at their highest prices in 15 years. Oil stocks, on the other hand, made jittle headway recently, a corporate fact-of jife that reflects adverse polirical pressures. Texaco, for example, was yielding 8 percent aonually on March 11, when the average finished at 1,003.31. Standard Oil of California carried a return of 6.6 percent.

said that some investors initiated selling programs as the blue-chip average approached 1,000.

Although the Dow rose 21.4 percent between Dec. S, 1975, and March 9, more broad-based market indicators such as Standard & Poor's "500" and the New York Stock Exchange index of all listed common stocks were ahead by only 15.8 per-ceot and 17.3 perceot, re-spectively, during the same

For the original 12-stock average, the total of the pri-ces of individual issues was divided by 12 to determine the aggregate change.

"But Charles Henry Dow reedily recognized that he had to make some adjust-ment to reflect the splitting of a stock's shares or a stock dividend," Mr. Shaw explains. "If not, the average would not meaniogfully reflect true price movement."

The solution was to create a divisor. Io 1928, the divisor in use was 16.67. Sioce that time. Dow Jones simply has recalculated its divisor—oow 1.588—to adjust for each change in capitalization among the component component stocks.

As a result, the Dow average is extraordinarily seosi-tive to the movements of its higher-priced issues.

If du Pont, for example, goes up by 10 points io a one-week period, the effect is to contribute a gaio of 6.30 points (10 divided by 1.588) to the aggregate particular issues. Only two chaoge in the average.

en the recovery now under way in the economy. They were disappointed, however, that the recent favorable reports on industrial production, inventories, housing starts, consumer confidence, auto sales and consumer prices failed to produce any significant enthusiasm in the financial markets.

It might merely mean that the market is undergoing a periodic consolidation phase after its spectacular runup since late last year, but it is recognized that the world's growing political turmoil and severe pressures on cur-rencies such as the British pound. Swiss franc and Italian lira might be warning of currency devaluations and more difficult economic troubles ahead for the world and the American economy as well.

In Florida, where the troubles of the construction industry and unemployment are paramount, the optimists point to the big gains from tourism this year and the hig increase in personal savings as auguries of hetter times soon abead.

Even though the marked slowdown in the state's population growth last year has dulled some of its bright outlook, some analysts note that growth is in fact continuing at a faster pace than the national rate.

New residents are still coming into Florida at a rate of 4,500 weekly, compared with 8,000 a year ago. The anoual gain is now down to about 2.9 percent, compared with 5.4 and 5.1 percent in the two preceding years. But the national gain in population has been only 1 percent.

Eventually, the optimists say, the continued influx of people will help to work down the hig overhang in housing in this state. Condominium huilding was down to an average of 386 condominiums started each month for the last 10 months of 1975 in southeastern Florida, compared with an average of 7,300 units monthly at the peak huilding period in 1973, according to Keith White of Wolff Economic Research.

Most estimates say there is currently a three-year supply of unsold condominiums in Florida, but Raymond D. LaCombe, vice president and economist for the First Federal Savings and Loan Association, thinks the real overhang may he 25 percent less hecause of demolitions, abandonments and projects that will be long tied up in litigation and thus unavailable on the market.

The housing and construction drag, many say, has beeo largely due to the huge inflation in land prices and housing costs in receot years rather than the effects of

John C. Hart, president of the National Association of Home Builders, said this week that high taxes and infiation had increased maintenance costs by more than 300 percent in the last 20 years and priced eight of 10 potential home buyers out of the market throughout the country. In Florida, the dilemma for potential home huyers has been even more severe, according to people in the realty field here.

Some realty and other sources here have been suggesting reductions in overpriced housing to stimulate the market, but such actions seem to be quite scattered, And, significantly, the higher-priced units have continued to sell much better than the lower-cost homes and con-

In one of the latest, luxury high-rise coodominiums at the northern tip of this community, the most expensive three-hedroom apartmeots were listed as sold last week at prices ranging between $151,000 and $214,000, while many of the two-bedroom units selling hetween $123,000 and $162,000 were still available. Similar situations are sald to prevail elsewhere. But, significantly, plans for additional wings in the Boca Raton complex appear to have been shelved indefinitely.

Two hankers in nearly Delray Beach reported that puhlic savings had been flowing into their institutions at a strong rate and that loan commitmeets for new homes, principally single-family units, had picked up notably in the last mooth or so. One expressed surprise at some of the new condominium-building, however.

"They must be anticipating something in the market fairly sooo," he remarked, with some skepticism.

Perhaps the hig upturn last month in housing starts nationally (a gain of 27 percent, the hest in two years) has created renewed optimism for Florida builders. Or perhaps they have been impressed with the continued growth of the population, the rise in incomes and the influx of tourists to spur future sales. Lower housing prices and borrowing costs would doubtless be more positive inducements.

In any event, the hrighter economic picture in many aspects of the economy down here may soon be spread-ing some extra sunshine into the country's total economic picture.

Some market watchers suggested that the investors' hesitancy reflected at least two factors: . The widely held assumption that once the Dow reached 1,000 it would add 50 or so additional points rather readily. The fact that it has not done so has led to some standoffishness. The continuing uncertainties in the foreign-exchange

Meanwhile, the credit markets gave a good account of themselves last week, with prices on the upside—

Conservation as a Major Energy Source

Efficiency and Insulation Offer Savings on Fuel

By DENNIS HAYES

Virtually all Federal money directed at the nation's energy problems is intended to expand, ensure, or regulate energy supply.

Only about 1 percent is earmarked for energy conservation. Yet conservation holds far more promiae over the next few decades than do any of the proposed new sources of

For example, ceiling insulation in a typical bome costs about $300 installed and will save about seven barrela of oil each year for the lifetime of the house. Oli saved is as valuable as new oil pumped out of rates, the present value of the energy to be saved by the ceiling insulation in future years is 60 barrels. When heating oil cost only $3 per barrel, insulation was not economically attractive. But today beating oil often costs $16 per barrel. By comparison, ceiling insulation is a dirt cheap source of new

The largest, cheapest, and most secure nearterm source of energy available to the U.S. is the one-balf of our energy budget currently being wasted. We could derive more than twice as much useful work from the fuel we consume if we better insulated our buildings, improved the efficiency of our machines, and carefully matched each energy source to its highest and best use. Instead of doubling our consumption of fuel, we could make our current fuel consumption go twice as far. Energy conservation is the least expensive, most reliable, safest and least polluting aource of energy we can tap.

Industry currently consumes 40 percent of the country's fuel. Recent studies by the Conference Board and the Ford Foundation's energy policy project suggest that enormous energy savings can be made with-out adversely affecting industrial productivity. The primary metals industries use about one-fifth of all industrial fuel. By adopting technologies now widely, employed in other countries, the steel industry can reduce its fuel demands about 50 percent by 1995. The refining of aluminum by the new chloride process instead of by the traditional Hall method yields energy savings of about onethird. Recycled scrap aluminum requires only 5 percent as much energy as aluminum refined from ore, Forty-five percent of industrial fuel is used to generate process steam. If this steam were first used to generate electricity and then used as steam, more electricity would be produced than the entire industrial sector now purchases from utilities.

The American Institute of Architects be-lieves that 30 percent to 50 percent of the operating energy in most existing buildings can be economically conserved, and that 50 percent to 80 percent can be saved in new buildings. The lower figures assume optimal insulation and the use of efficient furnaces and air conditioners. The higher figures assume the use of more sophisticated technologies, including solar devices, beat pumps, and "total energy systems." A significant national commitment to upgrading the energy efficiency of buildings would by 1990 save the equivalent of 12.5 million barrels.

of oil a day. Legislation has been introduced in the Coogress that would guarantee up to $10 billion in loans over the next four years and subsidize interest rates at 2 perceot to 5 percent for loans to promote insulation of bomes and small businesses. The states would receive $50 million to promote and administer the program.

Transportation now amounts to 24 percent of direct United States fuel consumption. An input-output economic analysis by a team from the University of Illinois found that transportation accounts for another 18 percent of the energy budget indirectly—to build and maintain vehicles, construct roads, rall beds and airports and the like. The Energy Conservation and Oil Policy Act of 1975 mandated that average automobile mileage must reach 27.5 miles per gallon by 1985. This must now be followed by other steps, such as promoting the widespread freight to more energy e modes. At present, truc of the fuel used for t while moving only one freight. The energy eff be increased 12 percen on" aerodynamic devic

The Corporate Image and NBC's 'N'

By WALTER LANDOR

We must break through with new directions

When a major broadcasting network produces a logotype aimilar in design to one developed by a small television station in Nebraska and a bank in Kentucky, it's not too difficult to see how the viability of the entire design profession could be ques-

The focus of attention, however, primarily has been on trademark research and seemingly high overall costs. It has not centered on what I feel are the real problems brought out by National Broadcasting Company's embarrassment, a greater understanding of which would lend enormous perspective to the role of corporate visual communications today.

Lacking this perspective, it seems to me many business leaders' instinctive suspicion of creative people in all fields would appear to be warranted.

Actually, the NBC logo controversy may be a blessing in disguise as now the need for renewed dedication to the expression of corporate uniqueness becomes apparent. Uniqueness can only be portrayed effectively by reflecting a corporation's true personality. This character cannot be fabricated. Personality, in most cases, can be discovered only after thorough research and analysis; examination of beritage and equity already existing in present design system; avoidance of abstract symbology lacking meaning; and dedicated effort on the part of designers skilled in both artistic and psychological communications.

Absolutely vital is a mutual commitment on the part of design firms and clients to expend sufficient energy and funds to execute a total design system rather than relying merely on a symbol. It has been the lack of both orientation and dedication to portraying corporate person-ality that has led to an environment which, if not changed, will produce more NBC-type

Also manifest in this environment has been a tendency, since the early 1970's. tn follow design fads—to be 'trendy' instead of concentrating on expressing corporate uniqueness. The best of all executions, m any communications attempt, is useless if the basic concept is not on target. Corporate symbolism, beyond just identifying, must trigger positive response and be appropriate to expressing the corporate purpose.

The void of personality that has formed today is leading to a kind of corporate unisex. This is reflected in an unfortunate sameness, a condition we see everywhere: hotel rooms, supermarkets, airplanes; even television commercials! Corporate unisex dates back to the mid-1950's when companies first tried, en masse, to personify themselves through the use of initials as indentifiers, emulating I.B.M., G.E., PPG, and other well-established abbreviations.

Business personality is best expressed through a total design program-rather than simple reliance on a 'trendy' symbol.

It didn't take long for alphabet soup to

Emphasis later shifted toward highly abstract symbolism. In this fad, many designers and clients literally threw away the corporation's past and denied themselves benefits of equity built from images used previously. The NBC peacock may be an example of

Subsequently, some designers began to discover the value of "wordmarks"—conversions of actual company names into symbolism - and "tie-lines" - well-chosen imagebuilding phrases, positioned near the word-marks. Yet, with sbstract symbolism still predominsting-much of it lacking feeling-it becomes casy to see how a major network and design firm, both of which, I'm sure, were determined to develop a very basic new corporate mark, could have arrived at symbology so vulnerable.

What may have happened at NBC was that out of probably bundreds of logotypes shown, the design firm and the corporation mutually hypnotized themselves into believing the simple geometric shape of the "N" to be a uniqua, protectable mark, which of course, it was not.

Secondly, the N, rather than NBC, is somewhat defensible when visual tie-ins with local stations are considered. The N probably was thought to be abstract enough to bear juxtaposition with other letters and names without causing visual confusion.

On cost, I doubt if NBC paid the reported high price for a symbol alone. This price is far above price-value relationship standards in the design profession and is completely non-competitive. Further, it is highly unlikely NBC would be so unsophisticated that it would accept such services without full understanding of market values in design. Clearly, the cost must have covered a total design communication system involving numerous applications throughout the corporate struc-

I feel strongly that the NBC situation proves abstract symbolism, however pure, is a risky road on which to travel in the future. The airlanes of visual communications are already overcrowded and the more totally abstract - and maaningless - symbolism is used the more danger exists of similarity, overlap into others' visual expression, and lack of ultimate effectiveness.

Within every corporation, there are well-defined resources available to be tapped in order to put across, visually, a unique message to that corporation's various publics customers, potential customers, financial community, top management, and employees), in spite of the fierce competition for attention today. A major challenge to business, therefore, is to derive maximum benefits, over a period of years, from the vast marketing

Phones: See It. Install It

For the 7.5 million residential customers of the General Telephone and Electronics Corporation, the lengthy pro-cess of installing a phone is being short-circuited. The old way, of course, was call-ing the phone company and making an appointment for installation, which meant waiting around for the installers. That's being abolished. Instead, General Telephone is rewiring thousands of homes in its service area and equipping all new custom-ers with devices that allow them to simply plug in their new phones when they get them. And getting them is easier, too.

After a successful test program, General Telephone says it is establishing stores, called Phone Marts, throughout its service area. Customers may visit the Mart at their convenience, select a phone from the variety on display, take the phones home and plug them in.

"Customer's reactions to the phone market concept bave been extremely gratifying," said Dennis R. Casey, marketing director of General Telephone, who said that a recent survey of 400 customers showed most preferred doing business in the Phone Mart fashion.

Fifty 10 75 Phone Marts will be opened this year, according to General Telephone, with the goal at close 200 outlets serving 90 percent of its customers. The idea answers the growing compe-tition in the sale of telephone equipment in the company's area, officials admit, but they also insist that the concept saves the company money and customers' time.

Coin Caper

Look again at the next bright new quarter you put into a vending machine. You may do better with an old dull one. The Bicentennial commemorative quarters sometimes get jammed be-fore making it through the machine's acceptor device. The result: no product and no quarter returned.

Aaron Schlevin of Purity Vending Service Inc., New York, put the problem this way: "It costs us about $27 a trip to retool all 300 of our machines because the Bicentennials are too thick." He added that Purity's coin and bill changers "tipped us off because the new ones got stuck going in and going out." Dr. George Hunter of the United States Mint's technical section said that quarters in general are the hardest coins to keep within a narrow range of specifications in the production process, "But," he said, "the problem is with all quarters not just with Bi-centennial quarters."

Gene Perschel of G & W Vending Inc., a distributor of game and cigarette machines in the New York area, added that many vending-machine companies may not be aware of the problem's existence.
"The coins are thicker," said Mr. Herschel, "but not by much, so the problem could easily escape detection."

As if there weren't headaches enough with the quarters, at least one vendor op-erator is concerned with the problem the 440 million new Bicentennial $2 bills—due in April—will create in bis bill changers. Change, any one?

The golden anniversary of the airline industry spawns a fight between United and Western over who was first. Most modern airlines trace their toots to 1925 Congressional legislation that for the first time authorized the Government to pay private companies to haul air mail. Ford Motor Company's airline division, winning con-tracts to carry mail from Detroit to Cleveland and Chicago, got the new era going on Feb. 15, 1926. Ford later

Help us develop impact analysis procedures for new energy technologies in a team atmosphere.

If you are an environmental analyst who seeks fresh challenge and the opportunity to contribute your talents to help develop our Nation's new emerging energy technologies, MITRE wants to talk to you. We're a leading nonprofit systems engineering company operating wholly in the public interest, and we have major assignments working with new energy technologies.

We're looking for professionals who understand chemical processes (not hardware or black box designers), and biological/ecological processes and have been involved with new energy sources.

state's 96 delegates. The President's spokesmen, as well as others in the party, immediately invited Mr. Reagan to give up the fight and win, instead, Republican gratitude as a unifier. The immediate reaction of the former California Governor was the opposite. He invited the President to withdraw and then, for the second time, deliberately tied Mr. Ford to Watergate. He said the President had misrepresented a Reagan statement though "there was a tape recorder. . . . Maybe they erased 18 minutes or something."

An early Reagan withdrewal would permit Mr. Ford to husband his campaign money and spend his time enhancing the main image he wants to project, that of a successfully working President. But a withdrawal would also mean, in all likelihood, a foreclosure on other possible nominees. and Republicans cannot be sanguine about Mr. Ford's performance so far. He has not lost, but he has not overwhelmed Mr. Reagan, a relatively weak opponent because his major base is in the doctrinaire right wing of the party.

Tha Democrats. As a measure of the relative standing of the candidates, tha popular vote in Illinois is not very meaningful. Mr. Carter. ex-Georgia Governor, won 48 percent. Governor Wallace of Alabama, 28 percent, but neither Senator Henry M. Jackson of Washington nor Representative Morris K. Udall of Arizona was on the ballot.

What is significant is that Mr. Carter took almost a third of the delegates against a "favorite son" slate pledged to Senator Adlai E. Stevenson 3rd and backed by Richard J. Daley, Chicago's mayor. Mr. Wallace received only 3 of the state's 169 convention votes.

Despite his accretion of delegate strength in Illinois, however, Mr. Carter and the other Democrats are still more or less where they were on the main question: Can any of them come within easy trading distance of enough delegates-1.505-for the nomination? As of now, that appears possible but unlikely. But Mr. Carter is obviously preparing for the trading: To avoid antagonizing Mr. Daley, he did not contest the mayor's delegates in North Carolina, There Is another primary there on Tuesday that could provide Mr. Wallace and Mr. Reagan with second chances for respectable Southern showings. Most analysts believe Mr. Carter and Mr. Ford to be

The Hearst Verdict: Guilty

A jury in Federal District Court in . San Francisco returned its verdict yesterday in the case of Patricia Hearst, finding her guilty of armed bank robbery and of the use of a gun to commit a felony.

The jury that delivered the verdict appeared to be a reasonable cross-section of the community. Seven were women, five men; eight had children; most appeared to have moderate in-

In his charge to the jury on Friday, Judge Oliver J. Carter emphasized that they alone had to decide the key issue in the trial, whether Miss Hearst had acted as a willing participant in the robbery of a Hibernia Bank branch in San Francisco on April 1S, 1974.

"An act is done 'willfully,' Judge Carter said, "if done voluntarily and intentionally, and with the specific intent to do an act which the law in fact forbids." Though no one can directly examine a person's thoughts, be said, the jury was entitled to infer intent from conduct. As for the expert. witnesses who testified as to Miss Hearst's mental atate, the judge told the jury it could decide to believe their testimony or not.

Among the kinds of evidence the jury bad to consider in reaching its verdict were: •The pictures of the robbery. The iury saw the still pictures taken by bank cameras during the robbery, as Hearst participated in the robbery, the defense contended that the pictures show another participant's gun aimed •Miss Hearst's own testimony. The defendant insisted that not only in the robbery but at all times until her capture on Sept. 18 last year, she had acted in fear of death. But she refused, in the presence of the jury, to answer questions related to much of her activity since the robbery, saying that she still feared death or injury from sympathizers of the Symbionese Liberation Army. The judge said the jury might consider these refusals in assessing her credibility.

· Expert testimony. Three defense psychiatrists and two prosecution experts clashed over whether Miss Hearst had been acting under what the defense witnesses called "coercive persuasion," a term that replaced what had carlier seemed a defense effort to convince the jury she had been "brainwashed."

•Eyewitnesses. The jury heard testimony that might bear on Miss Hearst's state of mind both during and since the robbery. One government witness said he had seen her pick up two ammunition clips and some live cartridges outside the bank, contradicting her assertion that she had no extra ammunition for her gun.

The verdict is a long-awaited climax in the story that began on Feb. 4, 1974, when Miss Heerst was kidnapped in Berkeley by members of the S.L.A. The group demanded as her ransom a distribution of food to the poor by her father, publishing executive Randolph A. Hearst, who spent $2 million trying to satisfy the demands only to hear his daughter say, on tapes made by the kidnappers, that his efforts were

On May 17, 1974, the first results of a vast police search for the group led to a shootout in Los Angeles in which six of the original kidnappers were killed. But ciforts to locate Miss Hearst herself were fruitless until last Sept. 18 in San Francisco.

Mr. Wilson Quits While Ahead

Harold Wilson resigned unexpectedly as Britain's Prime Minister last week, but his departure is unlikely to mean changes either in British domestic and foreign policies or the nation's severe difficulties. Mr. Wilson's successor will assume leadership of a tattered economy and of a Labor Party seriously divided.

Mr. Wilson said he resigned because he had served long enough and wanted to give others a chance to rule, and that his timing was meant to insure a continuation of Labor Party rule and of the economic policies that he recently has advanced - explanations that have been generally accepted. .

It was also likely that Mr. Wilson believed he was leaving the Labor Party in a comfortably strong position politically having moved the party to the right, pre-empting territory normally held by the Tories.

Mr. Wilson had been involved in British politics for 30 years, 13 of them as leader of his party. He bas been Prime Minister for eight years. He brought the party to power in 1964, after 13 years of Tory rule; he was Prime Minister until 1970, and again from 1974 until last week.

His successor will be chosen in the next week or so by the 317 Labor Party members of Parliament. The winner could serve at least until tha next general elections in 1979. It is possible, though there is no reason now to consider it likely, that an election will be called before then.

The leading candidate among the six Cabinet members in contention for the Labor leadership and Prime Minister's job appears to be James Callaghan, the Foreign Secretary, who is closely identified with Mr. Wilson's policies and acceptabla to the party's outspoken left wing. But contentious Labor Party politics, especially without Mr. Wilson's moderating influence, is not easy to predict. Mr. Wilson's recent economic policies-holding down wages, reducing public spending and increasing Government aid for industry-have been attacked by left wing Laborites who opposed his withdrawal from socialist principles. But the policies seem to bave gained widespread public acceptance, probably because Britain's high unemployment and inflation and badly weakened currency seemed to have justified stringent measures.

In Desperation, Even Reagan Uses It

Without Watergate, the Campaign Is Part Illusion

By JOHN HERBERS

For the better part of two years, ending in 1974, the United States was preoccupied by a trauma, the Watergate scandals that brought down a President and most of his cabinet. Yet in 1976, except for an occasional, jarring reminder by Ronald Reagan, the Presidential campaign so far has played before the American people almost as if Watergate never bappened. That is, on the surface; the absence of overt debate on the subject can be explained by the fact that the candidates are participating in the primaries only against members of their own party. Beneath the surface, in the opinion of many political analysts and participants, Watergate is what the campaign is much about, and it could decide the election.

Whila the traditional, Issue-oriented Democratic candidatea have been faltering or meeting with limited success, a one-term governor of Georgia who was little known outside the South three months ago, has emerged as the front-runner by stressing his personal credibility while remaining vague on important questions of foreign and domestic policy. "I will never lie to you," is the essence of Jimmy Carter's campaign.

A national poll conducted by the New York Times and CBS News in early February, just as campaigning in the New Hampshire primary was getting under way, showed that a clear majority of the people held the Federal Government in distrust. While the alienation factor, as it is known, has been growing for some years and bas many roots, there is agreement that the Watergate scandals were responsible for a large share of it. Thus, with a big segment of the population, especially the young and minority groups, tuned out of political participation, the campaign also bas become a test of whether government will rest on a majority or a minority mandate. Each candidate, in a different way, has sought to show that he can restore trust in politics.

President Ford's Republican challenger, Ronald Reagan, blurted out in Marion, Ill., on March 9 what the Democrats had refrained from saying: "I don't think we want to go into battle against the Democrats in November having to defend a part of the past which Republicans would like to be left to history." It was a reference to Mr. Ford's appointment by President Nixon and his partioning of Mr. Nixon in the face of wide public opposition. Last Thursday, campaigning in North Carolina, Reagan again referred to Watergate.

The Reagan, attack was widely viewed as a desperation tactic, as his campaign faltered, employed by a man who as Governor of California had defended Nixon in the weeks before be was forced to resign.

The President and his campaign aides have displayed great sensitivity to the Watergate issue. When Mr. Nixon went to China two days before the New Hampshire primary, several of Mr. Ford's assistants were distressed not because of what the trip might do to foreign policy but because of what a Nixon reemergence in public would remind voters of: the pardon. A few days ago, after the first allegation that Howard H. Callaway may have brought pressure on Government officials to permit expansion of a Colorado ski resort which he partly owned, Mr. Callaway's offer to step aside as the Ford campaign manager was quickly accepted. Any other President at any other tima might have ridden out such a controversy at least for a few days, but in the Ford White House, in election year, any hint of scandal sends up red flags. How much of a liability Watergate will be for the Republican Party and bow far the Democrats will go in pressing the issue later in the year are matters of conjecture.

Some respected political experts, such as Richard M. Scammon, the election analyst, believe Watergate is fading from the political scene. "We are an instant people," be said, who tend to forget past traumas when assessing

Implant in the National Psyche

Nevertheless, Watergate, like the Great Depression of the 1930's and the Vietnam War, became implanted in the national psyche, as a unique event that raised basic questions about the American government and the nature of democratic guarantees. William Schneider, assistant professor of government at Harvard, who has conducted studies on the effects of the Watergate issue, believes that it is a substantial part of the antipathy toward Washington that the candidates and the pollsters are finding in the country.

A poll conducted in New England by NBC News during the primaries there found about one-third of those ques-tioned believed that the next President should be someone outside Washington. Although this feeling has not enabled Mr. Reagan to overcome Mr. Ford-the Californian is widely viewed within his own party as unable to win the Presidency if nominated-but it has been of substantial belo to Mr. Carter, who bas never served in the national govern-

Anti-Washington sentiment works against Democrats, too, who are frequently seen as a part of overall government failures. In that sense, at least some of Watergate has rubbed off on them, even though Professor Schneider believes that there is a strong residue of voter disenchantment, too, with the most recent Democratic Administration, that of Lyndon B. Johnson. President Ford's supporters maintain that be has long since put the Nixon pardon and the part he played in the Nixon Administration behind him, and indeed the polls show that many voters give him high marks for integrity. But his real test on the issue will not come in the primary, but in the race against the Democratic nominee, should he win the Republican nomination, as expected. The Times/CBS poll in February showed that among those persons who found government to be untrustworthy and unresponsive, there were strong negative feelings toward the President. It would be unrealistic to expect the Democrats to let those feeling go unexploited.

Moro Consults Communists on Italy's Economy

Italy's Christian Democratic Prime Minister, Aldo Moro, has dramatized the depth of his country's economic and political instability by calling in Enrico Berlinguer, leader of the Communist Party, for discusaions on a proposed solution.

The immediate topic of the discussions between Mr. Moro and Mr. Berlinguer, was a new austerity plan designed to counteract the rapid devaluation of the lira. It has fallen by more than 25 percent against the dollar in the last two months. There is also a threat of renewed inflation and there is widespread unemployment.

Italians were not surprised at the consultations. Mr. Berlinguer has been called in by other Christian Democratic Prime Ministers in the past two years and the Communists have growing political strength. In local elections last June they took 33 percent of the vote compared with the Christian Democrats' 35 percent.

But the United States Government, which previously has expressed apprehension about Communist influence in Western European countries, said that actual Communist participation in Italy's Government-presumably in the Cabinet and not merely in consultations—"would call for a reassessment" of American relations with

In a speech to the first Christian Democratic Party congress in three years, Mr. Moro appeared to agree. with the Americans. He advocated keeping the Communists at a respectful arm's length and favored instead cooperation with the Socialist Party.

The Italian Communists now control many regional and municipal governments. Last week, in France, Communists received about 22 percent of the vote in nationwide local elections. The French Communists, however, ... were outdistanced by the Socialist Party, with whom they share a tenuous alliance. The Socialists got 27 percent.

Though the elections were no guide to national party strength, combined left-wing influence could affect French Government policies on such matters as direct voting for a European parliament, which has also been complicated by the announced resignation of Brit-Ish Prime Minister Harold Wilson.

The Moro austerity program, which raises sales taxes on consumer items such as automobiles, movie tickets and alcohol, has not been well received by Italian workers..

The Christian Democrats are a minority Government. The party is divided, and was even on the matter of consulting the Communists. They held their congress last week to seek a new strategy for regaining the political supremacy they long held. If the Moro Government falls, it is possible there will be new elections. The Communists then could emerge, finally, as Italy's leading party.

A Breakthrough? Israel Agrees to Talk to the P.L.O.

In what could portend a major change in policy, agreed to after some deliberation in Jerusalem, Israeli delegates plan to sit down in the United Nations Security Council tomorrow with representatives of the Palestinian Liberation Organization as the council debates Israel's policies on the occupied West Bank. Arab unrest is increasing significantly there. Until now, Israel has boycotted all meetinga of the council oo the Middle East whenever the Palestinians have participated on the ground that they aim to destroy the Jewish state. Last December, Israel stayed away from a debate on Israeli raids into Lebanon, and in January boycotted a full-scale Middle East debate. But now the Israelis will take part reportedly because the West Bank situation is viewed as an important Israeli domestic issue on which it is vital for the Rabin Government to present its case. The decision to do so was apparently not easy to reach. At first the Israelis agreed, then they said they would not.

and then agreed again. A spokesman for the Israeli foreign ministry was at paina to deny that tha decision represented a change in Israeli policy. Nevertheless, Israel's prior adamancy in the matter has been one major impediment to fruitful discussions on a Middle East peace, and though the United States has supported Israel in its position, there have been clear hints from Washington that it would like Jerusalem to relent. If Israeli representatives and those of the Palestinian Liberation Organization sit and debate in the same forum tomorrow, that will be a diplomatic precedent, no matter what Israel's motivation is, and will at least create the possibility of other discussions on

Mr. Sadat and the Soviets

. Egyptian President Anwar el-Sadat has substantially accelerated bis effort to end his economically depressed country's reliance on its Soviet patrons and turn toward the West, where immediate aid prospects seem more promising. He formally abrogated the Soviet-Egyptian 1971 friendship treaty, although its terms did not permit him to do so. Relations between Cairo and Moscow have been uneasy ever since Mr. Sadat succeeded the late Gamal Abdel Nasser, They reached one low point in 1972, when Egypt expelled 20.000 Soviet advisers, However, during the 1973 Arab-Israeli war, the Soviets were back with vital aid. Since then, Mr. Sadat has complained, the Russians hava been niggardly with the replacement of military equipment and have been too demanding about Egyptian repayment of loans that now total $4 billion.

Mr. Sadat has been soliciting eco-nomic aid from conservative Arab oil countries; Western observers saw a possible link between his recent Arabian trip and the break with Mos-

Mr. Sadat's action is also considered helpful for a forthcoming visit to Western Europe, again to seek aid, and in his attempts to buy military equipment in the United States. Washington analysts said last week it now seems more likely he will get the first installment of that aid, six C-130 transport planes.

The Israeli Bomb

The balance of military power in the Middle East has always been in doubt because of a prior doubt about the exact state of Israel's nuclear capability. Last week it was reported that the Central Intelligence Agency estimates that Israel does have between 10 and 20 atomic weapons. The disclosure came out of a supposedly secret briefing for aeronautical ex-

Syria Is Back to Work in Lebanon

Syria has returned to the complex lob of trying to produce the basis for long-lasting peace in Lebanon's sectarian civil war, but that nation's political, religious and military power splintered blocs are not making it any. easier than It was the first time.

The original Syrian-sponsored ceasefire, which ended mooths of bloody fighting, still threatens to come unstuck. A group of military officers seeks to depose Presideot Suleyman Franjieh, Lebanon's most prominent Christian leader, and so does a dissident army of Moslem soldiers formed deserters from the largely tian-led regular army.

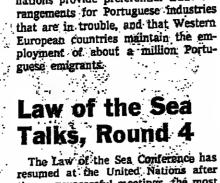

Mr. Franjieb is reported to bave agreed in principle to resign but wants a say in choosing his successor. He remains barricaded in a mansion in the hills outside Lebanon. Troops opposing him are camped nearby but are restrained by Syrian-backed Palestinian guerrillas.

The Syrians have no great love for Mr. Franjieh but are cautious about removing him. It was his concurrence in Syrian-proposed political changes, giving Lebanon's Moslem majority a greater say in running the country, that led to the first cease-fire. Forcible removal of the Christian President, the Syriana are said to believe, might. raise Christian fears of Mosiem domination, and lead to renewed fighting. or even possible division of Lebanon into rump Christian and Moslem

An Ad Hoc Internationale

Socialist leaders from throughout Western Europe joined their counterparts in Portugal last week to pledge support for that country's beleaguered economy. reached on two of four major issues. The current eight-week session, and another that will probably be beld in the summer, are considered by most authorities on the subject to be the last chances to bring stability to the increasingly volatile commercial and military intercourse on the seas.

The expectation is that there will probably be agreement by the 156 nations present on: (I) extending the territorial limits over which coastal; countries have exclusive jurisdiction from three nautical miles to 12 miles, and on (2) the establishment of a new 200-mila zone within which the coastal countries would have exclusive rights for oil exploration and fishing.

No agreement is expected now, however, on two other proposals: to guarantee unimpeded access by all nations through straits and passages that would be cut off by the extended territorial boundaries, and to create an international seabed authority to manage. and allocate the enormous natural resources outside the 200-mile limits.

The dispute on both issues is primarily between the Eastern and Western industrialized countries and the developing nations. The industrialized countries want free access to all international waters for their sizable commercial and military fleets, a matter of relatively little concern to the developing countries. The developing nations want to participate in an international authority that will advance their attempts to redistribute the world's wealth; the industrial countries want to be free to exploit deep sea resources un-

Rhodesian Peace Talks Turn to War Talk

Negotiatioos between Rhodesia's white minority Government and black Rhodesian nationalist leaders have once again been broken off. The two sides formally described the latest break as "an opportunity for consulta-tion and consideration," leaving open the possibility of resumption.

The opposite possibility also exists. Joshua Nkomo, leader of the black negotiators, called the new break "the; end of the road," and accused the Rhodesian Prime Minister, Ian Smith, of having "chosen war." But Nr. Nkomo has made such accusations before, then resumed negotiations.

As in the past, the current impasse is over the main demand of the blacks: immediate commitment to majority rule. Mr. Smith reportedly insists on a transition period of 10 to 15 years, proposal Mr. Nkomo called "contemptuous." Rhodesia has 6.1 million black citizens and 278,000 whites.

Whether negotiations will be resumed is, to most objective observers in that area, an academic question: Few expect the negotiations to suc-

One of the reasons that Mr. Smith has continued to hold out has been his belief that the United States and other Westero powers would infervene a black-white war in southern Africa, particularly if Cuba and Russia were supporting the black nationalists."

Last week, before the talks broke down, Mr. Smith and Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger had what may or may not have been a deliberate exchange, in public and at long range, over American policy toward the Salisbury regime. A day after Mr. Smith, in an interview with American television networks, restated his expectation of American support, Mr. Kissinger, in effect, answered bim in the negalive. He told a Congressional committee that the United States "will do nothing to help the white minority to exercise authority in Rhodesia."

Europe Again Approache Decision on Political Unit

By CRAIG R. WHITNEY

BONN-The European Common Market is undergoing statesman, Leo Tindemans, of Belgium, "that we have tn first salvage what has been achieved up to now and then try to make a significant leap forward." There is danger that the half-finished edifice of European unity will collapse without a great leap forward, a fear shared by Mr. Tindeman's and many other European leaders.

The Common Market nations can show whether they bave the will to become a European political union when the nine countries' heads of government meet in Luxembourg next month. They are scheduled to start talking, inauspiciously perhaps, on April Fool's Day.

That date was set before French President Valery Giscard d' Estaing lost his regional elections to a coalition of Communists and Socialists, and had to pull the franc out of the European joint currency float. It was before British Prime Minister Harold Wilson upset all Europe with his resignation. It was before the Italian economic and political crisis got so acute that once again the ruling Christian Democrats were flirting with the Communists.

The areas of success in bringing Europe together have been considerable but limited in scope. The Europeans consult jointly with the United States, they have a modest "regional program" to transfer resources from rich areas like West Germany to poor ones like Sicily, they brought the British in, and kept them in. But setbacks have occurred lately. There was wild inflation in Britain and Italy, there is turmoil on the European currency markets, and there is recrimination for who's to blame.

There is atili a chance to rescue "Europa" from these national difficulties, if the Nme can agree in Luxembourg on direct elections to the European Parliament in May, 1978. The parliament has been a debating acciety whosa 198 members have been appointed, not elected, by their own countries' legislatures since 1958. It is building itself a modernistic headquarters in Strasbourg but floats between there, Luxembourg and Brussels.

The idea of enlarging the parliament and making 300 to 400 deputies run for the office directly is to give them and the 255-million citizens they would represent a sharper sanse of being "Europeans," not just Germans or French: The parliament's powers would be limited to keeping watch over the Common Market's commission, the bureaucrats in Brussels, at first. Bot, the advocates of direct elections argue, a Europe-wida vote would give the parliament a mandate to talk about enlarging its legislative powers. In other words, direct elections are only a first step to political union.

Europeans bave been talking about this for 30 years. At the Paris conference of 1972, they set a goal of political union by 1980. That has been given up as unrealistic and now there are last-minute reservations about starting with direct elections. Though there are few Europeans with the old-time religion still around, the danger the pragmatists like German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt fear is that, without some symbolic show of good faith, Europe could too easily fall back into nationalistic protectionism.

The British, mindful of nine-centuries of proud acrossthe-channel independence, seemed to be about to gn along with direct elections until Mr. Wilson delivered his surprise. What position he or his successor-if one is chosen by then -will take at Luxembourg Is now uncertain.

The real key to a decision on direct elections, however, is in French bands. If Mr. Giscard d'Estaing says "non," a word Charles de Gaulle liked, then it will be easier for the British and the Danes and anybody elae with reservations to say "no" too. Mr. Giscard d'Estaing is running scared. His opponents on the left seem to be gaining strength and his tenuous coalition with the Gaullists is under strain. Both the Gaullists and the Communists are against the direct elections idea; the Communists describe it as "a crime against France" and the Gaullists say the arguments for it are "not convincing."

The Italians, the Dutch and the the strongest supporters of "Euro Schmidt has encouraged his friend Va direct elections and so has Luxembour the word from Mr. Giscard d'Estaing's chancier every minute."

Recollections of Winston Churchill's lone stand for the West in the darkest days of World War II come casily to the lips of Mr. Smith and his ministers when they address the nation. And in a way, white Rhodesians are exemplars of the same quelilies thet carried Britain through that period, albeit in a more generous ceuse. White Rhodesians are resolute, cool, ready to fight and disciplined in adversity.

The vast majority here are Biltish and liberal but . . happily established in a marvelous climate, where labor is cheap and life pleasant," said the Right Reverend Donel R. Lamont, an Irish-born Roman Catholic Bishop and leeding champioo of human rights. "They are decent to their servants but lack moral development and sensitivity. They are "A more craven, cowardly group of people doesn't exist." Bishop Lamont said of the leaders of the press. "They have developed an ability to emasculate any forthright statement and allow themselves only occasional squeaks of distress." Folitical opponents as well es internetional edversaries, particularly Britain, have come to develop high respect for Mr. Smith's shrewdness in dealing with adversaries.

Premature Retirement

"Make no mistake about it, Smith is a ruddy ruthless meo with opponents," said Sir Roy Welensky, Prime Minister of the defunct Central African Federation of which Rhodesie was a component. Sir Roy, regarded as the grand old man of politics here, wes driven into premature retirement in ao election campaign that featured a public attack on him as "A bloody Jew, a Communist, a traitor and a coward."

In 11 yeers of trying to resolve the constitutional conflict over Rhodesia's Unilaterel Declaration of Independence Britain has found Mr. Smith an elusive man to deal with, Agreements that seem to have been reached have a way of slipping eway. "Dealing with Smith is like trying to oail a jelly to the wall," said Sir Roy.

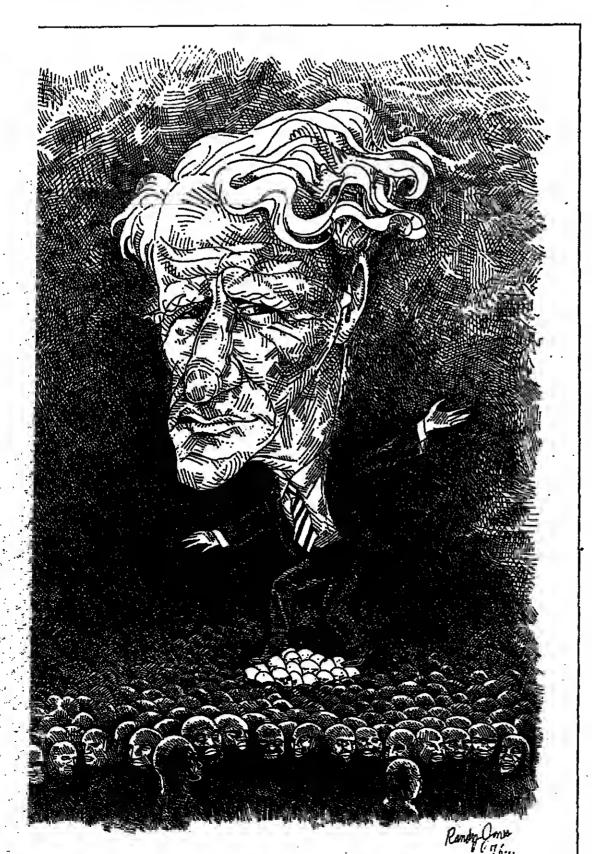

However great the damands have been on Mr. Smith's capacity to make his Rhodesia survive in adversity-outnumbered by 20 to one by blacks, repudiated by Britain, the motherland Rhodesians revered, ostraczed by the world, put under economic sanctions, however indifferently observed, by the United Nations-the pressure today is greater than ever before.

The Prime Minister's oegotiations with the most moderate nf the black netionelist leaders, Joshua Nkomo, collapsed Friday with scant likelihood of resumption. If the guerrillas who have made the entire eastern border with Mozambique a war zone can muster the force, they are likely now to intensify what has been largely a hit-and-run war. If they heve insufficient arms, the Sovlet Uoion, strengtheoed by its success in Angola may be tempted to repeat it here. Rhodesia's sole outlet to the outside world, since Mozambique sealed the border recently, is South Africa. And South Africa, while remaining as determined as ever to let its bleck majority be ruled by whites, has put heavy pressure on Rhodesie, to stop doing the same. South Africa fears that a recial war in the nelghboring country might not be containable.

On the face of it, it is difficult to see bow white rule can survive. For the time being, Mr. Smith still appears to be playing to win all, that is, put off majority rule into a distant future. If he persists on that line, a greater war, perhaps terrorism in the cities, is assumed to be inevitable, with a high possibility of internationalization.

Before he would scale down his hopes of keeping all the privileges whites now enjoy Mr. Smith probably would have to be convinced that only bis foes could count on major foreign assistance. For the time being the Smith Government seems to think that this question is still open, and its oegotiating lice remains tough.

Washington Mutters, But Tolerates Park's Ruthlessness

The High Price Of Stability In Korea

By RICHARD HALLORAN

SEOUL, South Korea-Ever since South Vietnam changed hands almost a yeer ago, it has been fashioneble in this part of the world to say that Korea is not Vietnam, thet there is little danger of the internal collapse in South Korea that permitted the Vietcoog to march into Saigoo.

That would appear to be largely true. The South Koreans are vastly different from the South Vietnamese in their national unity, their terrain, the cooventional rather than guerrilla confrootation with North Korea, their internal security apparatus, and their economic progress during nearly 20 years of peace.

But in ooe respect a parallel between Korea and Vietnam has appeared. More and more, President Park Chung Hee of South Korea resembles the late President Ngo Dinh Diem of South Vietnam with his repression, his Isolation from all but a few advisers, and the steady alienation of his Government from the people.

That is a theme which President Park's critics have been emphasizing receotly. Kim Young Sam, head of the opposition party here, seid that South Koreans will revolt unless President Park relents, "I don't want revolution," Mr. Kim said. "I want peaceful change."

The truth of the matter, however, seems to be that no one really knows just bow much support or bow much opposition there is to the President. There is no freedom of speech and the press priots only what the Government orders or permits. Thus only the official version is beard, and it says that the vast majority of South Koreans support Mr. Park, his Constitution of "revitalizing reforms," and his discipline rule.

Diplomats here are split in their assessment. Some, including the Americans, contend that disaffection is coofined to small but erriculate groups of politically alert per-Other Western diplomats and some Asians maintain that popular support for Mr. Park has gradually been eroded by his suppression of human rights, rampant corruption in a government that has imposed heavy taxes on people who bave already lost purchasing power because of inflation. The popular attitude is largely one of apathy, the kind of apathy that infected the South Vietnamese and dissipated their loyalty to the Government in Saigoo. The failure of leaders from Ngo Dinb Diem through Nguyen Van Thieu to arouse that spirit made the final defeet of Saigon's armies a certainty.

Americao diplomats here cooceded that measuring the degree of South Koreao apathy is of more than passing interest, for the military alliance between Washington and Seoul, and the relative security of 40,000 American soldiers here, presupposes the willingness of South Koreans to defend

The objective of American policy on the divided Koreen peninsula is, above all else, to maintain stability. Any major change iovolving the interests of the Soviet Union, China, Japan, and the United States raises the prospect, says one American official, of a "quaking bundle of imponderables." Specifically, American officials worry that changes will bring either • militarized or a neutral Japan, neither of which is considered good for American interests.

Americao policy bere, as elsewhere, is not to interfere in the domestic affairs of a aovereign ally. Occasionally the State Department in Washington issues a mild admonition, mainly because the suppression of buman rights continues to hurt Korea's image, especially in the Congress.

American officiala rule out economic aanctions as being inadequate, not credible, and cootrary to the objective of stability. Grant aid, which amounts to only $74 million, will end no Sept. 30, leaving nothing there to cut. Korea is also getting $160 million in economic aid, mostly grain sales at long term, low loterest rates, and $120 million in military sales credits. Cutting either would meao little but hardship for Koreao people or their security. Reducing American trade, loans or investment hurts the United States almost as much aa Korea. Perbaps more important, American officials argue, economic sanctions would lead to the very instability they ere trying to avoid.

A Strike North

Militarily, the United States has so far been reluctant to threaten to reduce or pull out its iofantry division and other forces for fear tha North Koreans will miscalculate. Privately, some American officials are concerned that a nervous President Park might try a "pre-emptive" strike north as a way to divert attention from internal troubles and unify his countrymeo behind him.

Thus, current policy makes the United States something of the same kind of hapless giaot it was in Vietnam. Everything is subordinated to security. Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger told a Senate committee Tuesday that "We are not very happy with some of the recent events in South Korea, and we heve made our views known. But at the same time, we do not want to have another attack on South Korea by North Korea. We have to strike a balance.'

But some contend that the policy eventually will be selfdefeating. "Freedom and civil rights should go hand in hand with national security," sald Mr. Kim, the opposition leader, "Those two things should oot and canoot be separated from each other."

The Government must give the people a cause to eoable them to defend freedom at the cost of their lives," he said. "If the present situation cootinues, perhaps the people may find no reason to fight for their country."

Friedman's Advice, Only Partly Taken, Hasn't Helped

Chile, Lab Test for a Theorist

By JONATHAN KANDELL

SANTIAGO, Chile-It is not often that a leading economist with strong views is given a chance to test specific prescriptions for a very sick economy. It is even more unusual wheo the economist's client bappens to be a country other than his own.

Miltoo Friedman, the University of Chicago professor, has achieved precisely that status in Chile. Hardly a week passes without a reference to his name or his theories io newspapers and magazines. Most members of the junta'a ecocomic team have either studied under Mr. Friedman or coosider themselves "Chicago Boys," disciples of the professor's conservative, monetarist principles.

Mr. Friedmao's views oo the Chilean ecocomy have also been largely supported by the United States State Department, foreign busiceasmen and bankers and an impressive array of international organizations such as the World Bank, the Inter-Americao Development Bank and tha Interoational Monetary Fund.

However, Mr. Friedman has been attacked by bis liberal colleagues io the Uoited States academic community for identifying himself with a government notorious for its violations of buman rights and for carrying out economic policies that have shifted the beaviest burdeo of sacrifice to the poorest Chileans. Mr. Friedman is also coming under fire oo professional grounds. Two-and-helf years after the coup against the Marxist government, a concerted effort to apply the Friedman theories in Chile has failed to turn around the floundering economy that the juota inherited from the late President Salvador Allende Gossens.

A Shattered Economy

Last year, the gross oational product declined by more than 12 perceot, led by sharp drops in industrial productioo. Unemployment, which is climbing above 16 percent, has reached its most dramatic levels in three decades. Maloutritioo la widespread in the urbao slums. Inflation, the maio target of the junta's economic policies, was 340 percent last year, the highest rate lo the world, and climbed by another 21 percent during the first twn months of 1976. A rare positive accomplishment is that the juota has kept up payments oo its buge foreign debt, in contrast to the Allende Government which declared a moratorium no its debts abroad.

Both Mr. Friedman and the junta maintain that the professor's economic theories have not received a fair test. For the government, the economic setbacks mainly deriva from the chaotic situation inherited from the Allende years. and an unfavorable international ecoonmic situation. Inflation reached an annuel rate of more than 700 percent towards the eod of the Allende Government. There were already sharp declines in every economic aector, industry, mining, and agriculture. When President Allenda assumed power in 1970, there were about $500 million in foreign exchange reserves and a foreign debt of about $2 billion. When his government fell, the foreign debt had mushroomed to $3.5 billion and there was only $3 million in Western European governments have refused to renegotiate Chile's foreign debt oo the ground that human rights continue to be systematically violated by the junta. To avoid a default, the junta must pay about $750 million in debt service, a total equivalent to about 45 perceot of its projected export earnings for, 1976. This, the Government contends, is the real cause of inflation because exchange earnings would be far better spent on imported machinery that would reduce industrial costs and on cheaper imports that would force down the price of Chilean products.

Mr. Friedman would take issue with this explanation for the failure of his economic theories in Chile. In a trip to Chile sponsored by a Chilean bank a year ego, he told the Government that it should stop blaming its troubles on the Alleode debacle and the international economic situation. The real culprit for rampant inflation, Mr. Friedman maintained, was government spending. The only solution, he said, was to cut the bloated job rolls in government, sell off deficit-ridden public enterprises to the privete sector, reduce the printing of money and restrict credit

Mr. Friedman would argue that these suggestions, known in Chile as "the shock treatment," have been only partially carried out, and heve therefore failed to contain inflation. The junta, oo the other hand, feels that with unemployment already at record levela and production still failing it cannot afford to impose the even more stringent austerity measures being snggested by Mr. Friedman.

But a growing number of disgruntled economists, busioessmen, trade unionists and one-Marxist politiciana believe that the real difficulty is that Mr. Friedman has picked the wroog country to test his economic theories.

Almost every economic sector is dominated by nne or two companies. With monopolies or oear-monopolies the rule rather that the exceptioo, the price of gooda is unresponsive to demand. A partiel list would include cement, glass, machine tools, chemicals, fertilizers, paper

Critics of Mr. Friedmao's ecoonmic theories argue that businessmen in key economic sectors are raising their prices because they find it more profitable in sell more expensive goods to a dwindling oumber of clients. It is a selfdefeating process. As production falls, the economic pie gets smaller, bankruptcies and unemployment increase, and the chaoces of natinoel recovery become dimmer.

But beyond the squabbles over the efficacy of Mr. Friedman's theories, critics of the professor point out that their application requires the continuation of a repressive political system. The "shock treatment" could only be carried out by atifling the media, banning political parties and shackling labor unions, all of which the juota has done.

The President's 2-Front Campaign

The Ford Administration both spoke and acted on its currently slightly atrained relationship with the Soviet Union last week, clearly reflecting the degree to which the Presidential campaign has expanded the context in which some aspects of foreign policy are being considered.

Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, again condemning Soviet action in Angola, reiterated basic American policy: constructive cooperation when possible, firm resistance when necessary. But in acting, the Administration seemed to give a limited definition to "firm": it postponed Cabinet-level meetings of Russian-American commissions on trade, housing and energy. But the State Department left open participation in meetings of those and six other commissions later this year.

So far as Washington is concerned, Soviet aid to the eventually victorious faction in Angola was a breach of the intent of détente, the relaxation of tensions, because Russian power was exercised where it had not been before, and far from the Soviet Union. Moscow sees it otherwise: The Russians have always excluded "wars of national liberation" from the restraints of détente and, in Angola, they did not consider themselves to be challenging the United States or important American interests.

There are no signs either nation will change its views or its actions concerning détente, but President Ford is acting in a context Moscow does not have to consider: the Presidential

To varying degrees, all the candidates of both parties, save Mr. Ford. have criticized the results of détente, and even the President and Mr. Kissinger have stopped using the word, presumably because of the political debits it incurs. The most aggressive critic has been the conservative challenger to Mr. Ford, former California Governor Ronald Reagan,

Mr. Kissinger, in a strong defense of his policies, has challenged the candidates to offer coherent alterna-tives, and in his testimony before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee last week he implicitly did the same. He did not get an alternative, but he may bave gotten what be wanted, A bipartisan resolution was introduced to the Senate supporting détente and intended to take foreign policy out of the campaign. It urged a widening of Soviet-American relations that takes into account the "risks and advantages" of such a policy. The resolution was so general that Senator Henry M. Jackson of Washington, another leading critic of détente in his campaign for the Democratic nomination, was able to join the sponsors.

Congress Gets Its Budgetary Alternatives

The Congressional Budget Office has issued its report on fiscal options for 1977, aetting in motion the new machinery that Congress created to help make sounder spending and taxing decisions. Among the options analyzed in the report is President Ford's proposed budget, which the office predicts would slow economic growth.

The report will become a basic working document for the House and Senate Budget Committees that are required to propose overall expenditure and revenue targets. The House and Senate must adopt preliminary figures by May 15 and final ones by Sept. 15, two weeks before the. fiscal year begins.

The report sets forth several alternative budgets and the projected economic consequences of each. If current Federal programs were maintained in fiscal 1977, it says, the budget would be $419 to $425 billion, the inflation rate would be between 4.7 and 6.2 percent and the unemployment rate between 6.4 and 6.9 percent.

President Ford's proposed budget of $394 billion, in contrast, might add 0.6 percentage points to the unemployment rate—making it as high as 7.5 percent—by late 1977, the report said. His proposal would have little bort run influence on inflation beause proposed increases in Social Security and other taxes would in-rease labor costs, the report said. The President maintains that unemployment, now at 7.6 percent, would lecline to 7 percent under his budget, which is predicated upon a stronger ecovery from the recession than that oreseen by the Congressional Budget

Congress might, the report suggested, wish to adopt an expansionary judget. As an example, it estimates hat an expenditure increase of $10 pillion over the expected cost of curent programs would bring unemploynent down by 0.3 percentage points ly the end of 1977, while increasing he inflation rate by 0.2 percentage

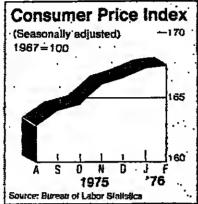

The major spending factors affecting he size of the budget, the report zid, will be the decisions Congress makes on expanding the nation's military capacity, creating jobs for the unemployed, granting assistance to state and local governments, funding health programs and raising Federal employees' pay.

The amount of Federal revenues for fiscal 1977, the report sald, will be largely determined by whether Congress decides to raise Social Security taxes and to extend cr increase the personal and corporate income tax reductions enacted in 1975.

Economic Indicators Still Up

Several important statistical indicators of the nation's economic health have confirmed that recovery from the recession is proceeding steadily. Industrial cutput rose in February for the 10th consecutive month since the recession's low point, housing starts increased substantially over the January rate, and business inventories had begun to rise.

At the same time, the consumer prices registered a risc of only onetenth of a percent in February, the smallest monthly increase in more than four years. That continued a trend toward moderation of the infla-

Hills Proposes Sneaking Up on Corporate Bribes

The chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, Roderick M. Hills, has suggested that the way to prevent bribery of persons overseas by American corporations is not to make it a Federal crime-placing the United States in the vulnerable posltion of policing the world's ethicsbut to strengthen existing laws falsification of company against records.

A number of major companies have admitted paying bribes to foreign officials and other persons overseas to win contracts, a practice that is not now illegal under American law. Mr. Hills contends that such bribery could be effectively controlled by increasing the criminal and civil penalties for falsely reporting corporate financial information to stockholders and the Government. In most of the known instances, the cost of corporate bribes was hidden in secret or deliberately mislabeled accounts; the securities commission bad to sue the firms to force disclosure.

Mr. Hills's approach is disliked by some lawyers and businessmen because it seems to punish the side effects of an activity which is not itself punishable. A more direct approach has been proposed by Senator William Proxmire, Democrat of Wisconsin; he introduced a bill last week to make bribery of foreign officials a crime. Senator Proximire argues that by passing and enforcing its own law against corporate bribery the United States would become not a policeman but an ethical exemplar for the rest of the

Some of the disclosures forced by the commission have created the possibility of scandals in several foreign countries. Japanese officiala visited Washington last week to learn more about payments by the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation in Japan. The West German government has formed a committee to determine whether Lockheed made payoffs to sell jets in that country. Although the United States government has expressed its willingness to provide at least some access to the information its investigators have uncovered, it is not clear bow far the foreign governments are willing to pursue the matter. Members of the ruling party in each country could be implicated. In the Netherlands, meanwhile, the Prime Minister has acknowledged that a Dutch engineering company paid almost $12 million in "commissions," with the consent of the Government, to obtain a large order from Argentina

Investigation at Home

The Securities and Exchange Commission is looking into the possibility that American companies may bave systematically bribed one another's employees in order to gain competitive advantages. Possible kickbacks and payoffs in several industries, including liquor and construction, are under investigation. Some of the evidence of domestic commercial bribery has evidently come to the commission's attention through increased scrutiny of company books by independent auditors because of the overseas bribery dis-

The Campaign: Callaway's Case

Federal inquiries have begun into allegations that Howard "Bo" Callaway, until last weekend President Ford's campaign manager, improperly influenced the Forest Service to obtain favorable rulings for development of a Colorado ski resort be bas co-owned since 1969.

Mr. Callaway had wanted to expand the ski runs Crested Butte has on Federal land, and had applied for permission to do so before be was named Secretary of the Army in May, 1973. He left that post last summer to join Mr. Ford's staff. Last December, local Rangers' recommendations against expansion on environmental grounds were reversed.

In pushing for the reversal, Mr. Callaway, then Army Secretary, met with Agriculture Department officials in his office, not theirs.

A Deadline, Tomorrow

It now appears highly improbable, if not impossible, that Congress will be able to reconstitute the Federal Election Commission by the close of business tomorrow, the deadline set by the United States Supreme Court for restructuring the panel.

All that is necessary to recover the ground on which the Court found the commission unconstitutional is a simple law providing that the board's members be appointed by the executive branch. But Democrats have attached amendments intended-to limit business's political contributions, which generally go to Republicans. Republicans have countered with a provisioo that would require labor unions, generally Democrats' allies, to disclose how much they spend on political mailings to their members.

Ultimately, passage of a compromise hill is anticipated. Meanwhile distribution of Federal matching subsidies to candidates will be interrupted. They are expected to feel the pressure, and perbaps then to bring some on Congress, early next month.

Ford Asks Court Approval for Most Wiretaps

The Ford Administration is preparing legislation that would close the last legal loophole permitting the Government to wiretap communications of Americans within the United States without a judicial warrant. The proposed law would require warrants for wiretapping persons suspected of engagiog in sabotage, terrorism or "clandestine intelligence activities" on behalf of a foreign nation.

The Administration bas apparently proposed the measure in anacipation of a recommendation on the same subject by the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence. The Administration bill has the tentative support of influential liberals on the Senate Judiciary

A 1968 statute required warrants for wiretapping in ordinary criminal investigations, but not for national security cases. The United States Supreme Court narrowed the exemption in 1970 by ruling that warrants were needed for national security investigations involving purely domes-

The remaining exemption for the investigation of foreign intelligence activities has disturbed some members of Congress, particularly liberals. They believe that it violates the Fourth Amendment prohibition against unreasonable search and seizure and that it leads to unnecessary surveillance of Americans who bave innocuous contacts with foreign governments. Some Congressmen also fear that some domestic intelligence investigations are shunted to the "foreign" category to justify a warrantless tap.

The Administration bill attempts to ensure that wiretaps are not approved perfunctorily-a criticism frequently leveled at the warrant procedure-by requiring wiretap requests to be aigned by an official of Presidential appointee rank and by creating a special group of seven judges to rule on the requests.

A Busy Social Life In the Pentagon

Rockwell International Inc., an important defense contractor, has disclosed the names of 39 military and civilian officials the company entertained over several years at a Chesapeake Bay hunting lodge it owns. The list, given to the Pentagon and a Senate committee investigating such entertainment, exemplifies the often close connection between defense contractors and Government officials responsible for buying military equipment from them.

Among the visitors to the Maryland lodge were Adm. Thomas H. Morrer. who retired as chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff in 1974, and Vice Adm. Vincent de Poix, former director of the Defense Intelligence Agency. A Pentagon spokesman said the Department's general counsel was studying the circumstances of the visits.

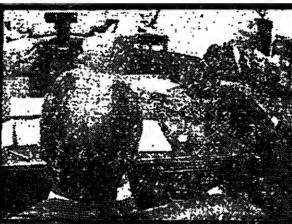

Rockwell is not the only contractor to have engaged in the practice: 38 high-ranking officials were admonished recently by the Defense Department for allowing themselves to be entertained in a lodge belonging to the Northrop Corporation. Nor are Pentagon officials the only members of government involved. Rockwell is known to have used its lodges to entertain members of Congress who sit on committees that deal with programs in which the company has an interest.

WASHII!GTON-A young volunteer at President Ford's campaign headquarters had e brilliant idea not long ago for disposing c. waste paper. What the President Ford Com-

"Oh. gee, I con't think so," Peter F. Kaye, the campaign spokesment remembers having replied, with an equanimity that hid a shuddering : wereness of how inappropriate the recommendation was. The swift buried of the paper shredder idea was one illustration of an unwritten rule at Mr. Ford's campaign headquarters: Don't CREEP.

Four years age, electronic monitors and locked doorsand paper shredders—guarded the secrets of Richard M. Nixon's Committee for the Re-election of the President (CREEP). As events later showed, even a subpoena would have had a bard time getting in.

This year, the President Ford Committee has set about presenting a deliberate contrast between itself and CREEP, between the trustworthiness of Mr. Ford and the stigma that Watergate stamped on his predecessor.

·Ironically, that zealous undertaking was best described by Howard H. Callaway not long before be was squeezed out of the Ford campaign chairmanship. "We don't have many secrets here, just some things we'd rather Ronald Reagan didn't know about yet," Mr. Callaway told a visitor a few days before he went on "temporary" leave, pending investigation of charges that he used his influence as Secretary of the Army for personal gain. The swift removal of . Mr. Callaway-in effect, he was given the choice by the White House of resigning or going on paid leave-was a prime example of the quickness with which the Ford campaign intends to act to avoid any intimation of scandal.

"I don't think anyone confuses Ford with Nixon," Mr. Kaye said. He conceded, though, that "the burden of proof is on us this year." The burden has been taken up eagerly. "If we act now, a man of uncommon moral strength can become our President."

-Archibald Cox Special Watergate Prosecutor

"We choose a President in 1976, but we choose much more. We decide once again, as the Declaration of Independence proclaimed, whether to commit "our Lives, our Fortunes and our sacred Honor" to the adventure in self-government.

Inaction is a luxury we cannot afford.

The war and collapse of U.S. policy in Vietnam, incompetence and drift in government, the use of lies, secrecy and manipulation by high public officials have shaken self-confidence and cause divisiveness, despair and distrust.

Watergate proved the conscience of America;
and in the end both Watergate and Vietnam demonstrated the strength of open government.

The ideals and ability that led Americans through earlier difficulties still survive. We face hard problems. We can solve them if we will—and only if we will. The adventure in self-government depends upon self-confidence—upon trust in our elected representatives and in each other.

Trust in government is not to be had for the asking, nor is it gained by the politics of image. It begins with the trust which those who govern repose in the people.

Only a man of character can restore that confidence. Only a man of openness, integrity and courage can bring us together.

I believe Morris Udall is such a man. People can trust him because he trusts the people.

Long before Watergate, he worked quietly and effectively for reforms in campaign financing laws which would elminate corrupt practices and compel disclosure. Much of the new campaign financing law came from the bills he sponsored.

His conscience moved him to oppose the war in Vietnam long before other good men, despite the fact that his brother was a member of President Johnson's cabinet.

Morris Udall won the confidence of his colleagues during these struggles, not through publicity or political gimmickry, but through his intelligence, hard work and competence.

With great ability he combines the openness and humility which assure that neither place nor power will corrupt him.

Morris Udall is not a man for yesterday. His youth and vision make him a man for today and tomorrow.

I urge you to join me in supporting Morris Udall for President."

Workers were recently thronging the streets of Tokyo in protest over the Lockheed affair, and the Japanese Opposition party was hlocking legislation in the Diet. What if the present government fell and the United States had to deal with the opposition? According to Mark Feldman, a deputy legal adviser at the State Department and one architect of this policy, the aecrecy provision was included "in the interest of protecting the law enforcement procedures of the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Justice Department." He said that there was also concern about "United States instrumentalities being the engines of disclosure to other countries of wrongdoing in those countries." The Japanese have already agreed to the secrecy condition and bave come here for the material. The West Germans sent "a working group."

Experts in international law make the point that the United States has no legal obligation to provide the information; the Administration is doing the Japanese people—if not the Japanese Government—a favor. A former State Department official, Professor Andreas Lowenfeld of New York University Law School, called the situation ironic. "In all kinds of areas where the United States has tried to get information from Japan," he explained, "Japan has said no."

Although the United States may be legally entitled to impose conditions of secrecy, it is not clear whether the procedure chosen will merely satisfy the requirements of due process or go beyond them to result in a total suppression of the facts. If the Administration is really motivated by a desire for due process, Professor Lowenfeld argued, it can bardly be faulted. The danger, be warned, lies in contrived delay. Each country could say, for example, that it was delaying public disclosure because it did not want to hamper an investigation in the other country.

In Summary

New Jersey assembly members watch the vote tote board during debate over a state income tax.

This Time, N.J. May Really Get An Income Tax

It appears that a New Jersey income tax, sought by the state's Governors in vain for years, may be close to enactment. Knowledgeable observers believe the State Senate, which has been the nay-sayer five times in the last two years, will go along when it takes up the matter this week.

The reason for expected Senate approval this time is the addition of a "sweetener" in the legislation passed 43 to 33 by the Assembly last weeka measure designed to appeal to the major opponents of an income tax, the state's bomeowners. The sweetener is a so-called homestead bill that would generally exempt the first $10,000 of a home's market value from taxes; the average saving would be $275 per bousehold annually. The Assembly also voted to limit increases in county and city budgets to 5 percent a year and to give $100 million a year in aid to cities from income tax revenue; together, those measures would give homeowners tax relief averaging another $100 a year.

Under the Assembly hill, the income tax would go into effect April 1. No tax would be paid on the first $3,000 of income. There would be a 2 percent tax on adjusted gross income of up to $10,000; $200 plus 2.5 percent on income between $10,000 and $17,500; $387 plus 3 percent on income between $17,500 and $25,000; $612.50 plus 3.5 percent on income between $25,000

The watchdogs, headed by Otto Kinzel, a retired Union Carbide executive, urged the Legislature to create a unified retirement system for all post-1973 employees that would coordinate state and local benefits with those peid under Social Security. The study found retirees gelting 20 to 35 percent more to spend than they had when they were working. The goal would be to save $2 billion in public funds over the next decade through a combination of required employee contributions and reduced initial benefits.

Leaders of the major state unions told the commission at hearings last week that its idea was terrible. The municipal unions boycotted the hearings, but they made no secret of their determination to kill the plan at Albany.

It will be a fight filled with irony because the civil service funds, so expensive that the commission eccuses them of helping shove both city and state to the lip of bankruptcy, have in recent months largely replaced the big banks and underwriting syndicates as the principal source of money with which to keep public agencies from

At No Point Is the System Really Helping

The New York City funds, with combined assets of $8 billion, have already invested $1.2 billion in city paper and have pledged $2.5 billion more toward the financial package required to keep the metropolis solvent until mid-1978. The state funds thus far heve come up with commitments of roughly $800 million to bail out state agencies.

These heavy investments of reserves reflected a belief by most of the union chiefs that layoffs of their active members would double or triple if the city or state went under. But these same investments now operate as a deterrent to strikes or other use of union muscle of the kind formerly used to coerce City Hall or the Legislature on pension matters.

"We have e terrible need to keep the city afloat," says Victor Gotbaum of the 110,000-member Council 37 of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees. "As big investors in the city, we also have to be cooperators. It is a two-edged sword."

Realistically, however, the unions have high hopes that they can induce the legislators to sweep the Kinzel report under the rug without brandishing either their money begs or their picket aigns.

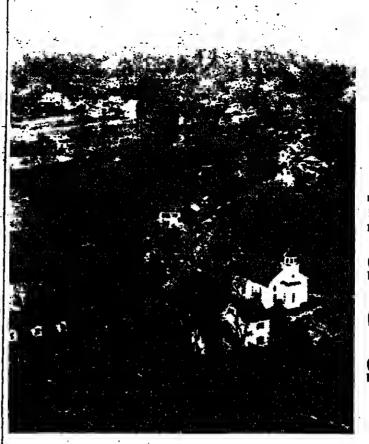

The secret weepon on which they expect to rely is the forthcoming report of another high-level commission -Mayor Beame's management advisory board, headed by Richard R. Shinn, president of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company. The unions say the Shinn task force will show that the municipal systems are "adequately funded by any yardstick" and in no need of immediate supplementation through expanded tax contributions.

A less sanguine appraisal comes from high city officials, but they agree that a step-up in city funding can be deferred until after the budget is back in balance.

The union ploy at Albany will be to demand that pensions be restored to the collective bargaining orbit, but their fallback position, and the one they predict will prevail, is a one-year extension of the status quo. Tha key almost certainly lies with Governor Carey. He bas frequently expressed his personal support for integrating pension and Social Security payments, the thing the unions find most repellent in the Kinzel proposal. However, the immediate savings from such a shift would be small, and in a year when Mr. Golbaum and Albert Shanker of the United Federation of Teachers have usurped the role once pleyed by Chase Manhattan and Citicorp in providing the wherewithal to pay the government's bills many in Albany expect the Governor to pass.

Now ... spanning the countryside, serving millions

In four decades, we've grown from a handful of rural electric cooperatives serving a few communities to a vigorous network of a thousand systems spanning the country . . . from a market of a few thousand dollars to two billion annually for equipment and services.

Today, we own and maintain nearly half the nation's electric distribution lines to reach some 25 million consumers. Yet, it was only 40 years ago that 90 percent of the people in the countryside struggled along without reliable electric power.

We power a thriving rural America . . . the world's greatest agricultural system. We're seeing people return to the land, to live and work and play. And in the next live years alone we anticipate two million new

The woman was called to testify several times, only to find the bearing repeatedly postponed. After five

The probation officer decided tha case should go to a judge and within a few hours Charles was arraigned. Then, as usual, the boy was sent home in his mother's custody.

While that case was dragging through the court, Charles got hold of a shotgun and began robbing small grocery stores. He was caught eventually, taken to court and sent home to his mother again to await a hear-ing before a judge. Within two weeks the police had him again-this time for pushing a 63-year-old woman into her apartment and beating her unconscious while she kept insisting she bad no money. For Charles tha routine was the same: into court, back to mother.

In a few days, Charles was called to court for the mugging with the sharpened stick and found guilty. Since he had no previous convictions, the judge put him on probation.

Charles was taken directly to tha Juvenile Center on Spofford Avenue in the Bronx. The next day he was arraigned in court and returned to the center. Doctors at Bellevue Hospital diagnosed Charles as being extremely depressed, but a state mental hospital refused to admit him, saying it bad no place for a violent teenager. Charles was found guilty of the murder and sent to the state training school at Warwick.

In nearly every way, the impact of the system on Charles appears to bave been negative. None of the probation officers bad enough time for him, and all of them, critics say, did too littla for him. The perception of the youth, they say, is that he is beating the system and, in effect, he feels encouraged to continue. The critics say the youngster draws the same concluaion from the long delays in the Family Court and such responses as assignment to ineffectual probation. Reform minded specialists say that, for a start, someone needs to be put in charge, and the various pieces of the juvenile justice system have to be coordinated. Then, they say, one of the most important factors is to begin dealing decisively with youngsters at the earliest sign of trouble, so thet the criminal experiences do not continue to bulld, as they did in

The worst mistake, many authorities believe, is simply to lock up teenage criminals in adult-style prisons for years on end. "They'll come out eventually," one specialist said recently, "and then you're just going to have bigger monsters."

Upward and Inward at the Teahouse

"In Japan, instead of saying 'come in' they say 'come up'. To understand the Japanese tanguage and basis for expression like that you really need an uthentic environment," says Harold Wright, professor of Japanese literature.

To provide u bit of that environ-ent, Wright and his students are building a Japanese teahouse which now stands, almost complete, between the outdoor amphitheater and the community garden. The structure is raised above the ground on piled flat stones. Wright shows how language relates to environment by stepping up, rather than in, to cross the teahouse's threshold.

A brainchild of Wright's summer aesthelics and environment class, the teahouse is built to resemble a fourteenth century Japanese hermit's cottage. This building is simple, rustic and a far cry from the class' Original fantasies of "temples and medieval eastles."

"The lighting is very important. This window is here so that someone silting on the floor can look out on the garden. The root window trames a particularly beautiful tree limb," said Wright.

The house's materials bespeak the architect's authenticity and improvisation. Inside, log beams point up to a thatched roof half with straw and half with comstalks.

This architectural eclecticism has provoked passersby to claim the teahouses origins are variously Alriean. Latin American and Asian, "Actually what we have is a cross between Japanese aesthetics and Appalachian architecture." Laughs Wright.

Wright is hired by the Japan Foundation and the Great Lakes Colleges As-sociation to teach Asian studies at Antioch. His eight years in Japan helped him assimilate a lot about both the Japanese aesthetics and culture. This quarter he teaches a course in Japanese Women in Literature.

Back when women's lib was women suffrage, we made a pledge to young women of ability

In the early 1900's we were ahead of our time. Founded when the right to vote was still denied to women, our commitment from the first was to the higher education of women. . From the beginning we stressed high academic standards, a challenging curriculum and faculty quality things not necessarily required or a women's college and built a reputation that we've maintained down through the years.

"No one can take your place at the College of New Rochelle"

In the early 70's we were still ahead of our time. Ignoring the trend away from single-sex colleges, we held firm. in our commitment. Today, as others weigh their gains and losses, we feel renewed in having kept our identity as a four-year liberal arts college for women. Meanwhile, our mission has been broadened in terms of graduate studies for both men and women, a program for adults who missed or never had the opportunity for higher education, and collaboration with the surrounding community. But to the students in our School of Arts and Sciences and all young women with a contribution to make, our promise is as firm today as in the past: "No one can take your place at the College of New Rochelle."

The frequency of "insanity" among the groups studied was 4.4 per thousand for the Eskimos and 6.8 per thousand for the Yorubas. These figures are similar to rates of diagnosed schizophrenla in Western countries.

Neither the Yorubss nor the Eskimos had a single word to express the group of symptoms, including snxiety and depression, called "neurolic" by Western cultures, but both recognized many auch individuat symploms as forms of "ittoess."

According to the author of the sludy, anthropology professor Jane M. Murphy of the Harvard School of Public Health, these findings lend to contradict the so-called "labelling" or "societal reaction" theory of mental illness, held by some sociologists. This theory pro-poses that deviant behavior is judged by each society in ways peculiar to that society. They would also tend to contradict the psychiatric view, identified for example with Thomas Szasz and R.D. Laing, that the designation of "mental illness" is a pernicious one, applied by Western society to stigmatize behavior oot inherently "sick."

"Soldier" termites surround and prepare to attack a centipede.

Termites Play Team Defense

Experiments with termites found in Africa, Central America and Australia have shown they have a community defense system that may be one of the most sophisticated in the insect world.

'Soldier'' termites, whose sole duty is to protect their colony of "workers," eject an odorous, viscous apray that entangles, irritates and partly suffocates enemies such as ants, spiders and centipedes. Like some other insects, such as bees, the termites also use the secretion as an alarm signal to call other "soldiers" into action.

The findings were made by a team of Cornell University biologists who conducted field and Isboratory ex-periments with Australian termites. The team's leader, Prof. Thomas Eisner, says that some ants are able to penetrate the termites' defense, but how they do it is not known.

California's Vital Interest

In California, with its 11,392,000 automobiles, more than any other state, the streets belong to the people, at least to those with cars. Last week, part of the Santa Momea Freeway, the state's busiest road, was taken away from most of tha people in an effort to reduce congestion and save anergy by encouraging the use of buses and car pools. Results reported were mixed.

Ooe inbound and one outbound lane from downtown Los Angelas were reserved for buses and for cars containing more than two occupants from 6 to 10 A.M. and from 3 to 7 P.M. On the first day, backups occurred along the freeway's entire 12.5 miles and some adjacent roads. Commuting times were sharply reduced for those io buses and car pools, but doubled for many others. Police issued more than 650 "warnings" to drivers who defied the rules, and accidents were more than twice the normal number.

Later in the week, the situation was reported as improved but-still marred by accidents and delays. Reliable figures on increased use of buses and car pools are not expected to be available for some time, but bus patrooage in the first morning rush exceeded 900, about 40 percent more than normal.

An Insight Into 'Crib Death'

Autopsies on 114 babies who died of "sudden infant death syndrome," often called "crib death," show they had anatomical differences from healthy babies who died of accidential causes, according to evideoce presented at a meeting of the National Foundation for Sudden Infant Death in Boston this week.

From 8,000 to 10,000 American Infants a year are victims of the syndrome, which causes apparently normal babies to die suddenly for oo known reason. Until now, no difference had been shown between such bables and others.

The autopsies showed a paltern of excessive red blood cell production, enlarged right veotricles of the heart, thickened walls in the lung muscle arteries, and other abnormalities consisteot with the theory that victims of the syodrome are chronically lacking in oxygen. But the underlying cause remains uoknown, and none of the abnormalities can so far be detected before death. Consequently there is still oo way of knowing whether an individual baby is more likely than another to die a "crib death."

To the New York State Legislature:

arly in February, after the New York City schools had suffered an additional $40 million budget cut on top of the $270 million that had been cut from education at the beginning of the school year, and after another 2,000 school personnel had been laid off, an open letter to the Governor appeared in this space. In that letter, on behalf of public school children, pare is and staff, I invited the Governor to join me in a visit to the city schools "and see for yourself the disastrous

"The Stavisky-Goodman Bill must be signed into law, effects of the budget cuts." I wrote:

"Schools have been singled out. They have been cut between two and three times as much as other agencies.

"The state has a special responsibility to the schools, for alone among all city functions, education is not only a local responsibility but is mandated by the State

"As The New York Times pointed out editorially, "... the schools have been singled out for a succession of new blows . . . at issue is not a sneak attempt to outflank the city's austerny budget, but an honest effort to save the schools from becoming shock absorbers for an excessive share of the City's painful but essential

Some days later, the Governor accepted that invitation and plans were made for such a visit next week. But late Thursday, Governor Carey sprogated his commitment and - in callous disregard of the months of pleas from tens of thousands of parents and other concerned New Yorkers-veloed the Stavisky-Goodman Bill.

Now you, the legislators of the State of New York, have an obligation and an opportunity.

You passed the Stavisky-Goodman Bill by overwhelming majorities in both houses of the Legislature-126 to 10 in the Assembly, 37 to 15 in the Senate, Now you have an obligation to the children of New York City to override the Governor's veto. When you do, you will make legislative history, and history will judge you by your commitment to the education of this public school generation - for if we fail our children oow, there can be no health for our city or our state now or in the future.

The Congress of the United States within recent years has been confronted with a succession of Presidential vetoes on education and other measures to promote the public good. With increasing frequency, Congress has risen to the occasion, perceived the public interest and overridden a velo. If the Congress can override the President, you can override the Governor.

Our schools are a disaster area - they have been hit with personnel cuts of 22 per cent while other city agencies have been cut 11 per cent. They have lost more than 20,000 classroom teachers, guidance counselors, attendance teachers, paraprofessionals, security guards, laboratory technicians and secretaries - along with afterschool programs, library services and other elements of a normal and healthy school life. Some students had as many as eight teachers in one semester - and then the waves of layoffs and excessing began again in February. More are in store next September under the city's austerity plan — and decimation will become destruction.

There is another aspect to the budget cuts which has only recently begun to be discussed - the enormous increase in school violence. Assaults on staff in the city's. high schools are running more than 100 per cent ahead of the same time span last year. There is tremendous frustration in the schools - oversize classes, reductions in supplies, cutbacks in elective subjects, loss of school sports and clubs. Along with this frustration, we have taken away the people who can iron out problems and keep the lid on - guidance counseling and psychological and social work services have been cut by more than a third. Thousands of teachers and paraprofessionals who might have helped with individual attention are gone. To make matters worse, the ranks of security personnel have been reduced to the point of peril - in many of the city's schools there is no one to keep out intruders.

The Stavisky-Goodman Bill does not protect the schools against all cuts. By mandating the same proportion of the city's budget for education as education averaged in the past three years, the bill simply assures that the schools and the children will not continue to bear an unfair, disproportionate burden of the city's fiscal ills. It is not the dollar amount which is fixed, but the percentage - 20 per cent of $2,000 is $400, 20 percent of $200 is $40 - so that if the city's overall budget goes down, the dollar amount for schools will decrease, too. But at least we will continue to have a school system.

Maintaining a viable public education system is one of the many things we must do to keep business and middle class taxpavers in our city and our state. If we do not retain this tax base, New York City is finished, and when it goes. New York State will

 I urge you to consider these issues seriously in the days immediately ahead — and to vote to override the Governor's veto. Whatever alleged "embarrassment" this may cost the Governor is his responsibility - not yours - and a red-faced Governor is a lot bester than an uneducated child who will become an intemployed adult.

Finally, we are aware that because of the political problems that have become part of the enactment of the Stavisky-Goodman Bill, there may be an attempt to have an override vote in a session that is not well attended. The Legislature should know that the public will regard absence during a vote on the Stavisky-Goodman Bill as a vote against it - and will make its judgments accordingly.

Pursuing what he describes as a "late strategy." Senator Frank Church last week aonounced his candidacy for the Democratic Party's Presidential nomination.

Because he delayed his entry until completion of his work as chairman of the Senate inquiry ioto the intelligence agencies, Mr. Church recognized that at best he cannot hope to win more than a small portion of the delegates needed for a majority. But he believes that a string of victories in the late primaries will give him the prestige to enter the convention as a credible

In tweaty years in the Senate, Mr. Church has had an exemplary record of integrity, of progressive views on major domestic issues, and of sanity in foreign policy. Declaring his candidacy, he stressed several classic liberal themes. He decouoced government by secrecy. He deplored the aubversive notion that Government officials could ever justifiably he lawbreakers. He rebutted tha Nixonian coocept that a President can exercise "aovereignty" independent of the powers delegated to him by the Constitution. He called for a foreign policy free of imperialist pretensions and cold-war compulsions.

The first primary in which Senator Church can compete occurs in Nebraska on May 11. Most of the other closing primaries in late May and early June are in the -West, including Idaho, Nevada, Oregon and California. But before Senator Church can test his strength with the voters, events in the intervening primaries may drastically alter the present shape of the Democratic contest.

It is now a five-man race with former Governor Jimmy Carter, Senator Henry M. Jackson and Representative Morris K, Udall bunched together in the lead. Governor George C. Wallace is a diminishing factor after successive defeats by Mr. Carter in Florida and Illinois. Former Senator Fred Harris is a distant fifth.

Senator Church's bid, like the shadow candidacy of Senator Hubert H. Humphrey, depends upon there being a multiplicity of candidates right through until the national convention opens. Conversely, Mr. Carter hopes to narrow the number of his rivals steadly until he is the victorious survivor, As a comparative outsider in the party's power structure, he knows that if there is a brokered convention, he is most unlikely to emerge from the smoke-filled rooms as the nominee.

At this juncture, Wisconsin appears to be an increasingly significant contest. Unless Representative Udall can defeat Mr. Carter there, the number of major contenders will dwindle to two as the race is transformed into a Carter-vs.-Jackson confrontation.

All of this may occur before Senator Church's name even reaches the voters on the Nebraska ballot two months from now. Thus, the late strategy is a high-risk strategy. But in terms of the nation's self-education on the issues, the Church candidacy can only be a positive event. The themes he seeks to emphasize are basic themes that urgently require discussion.

Controlling Tappers

The revelation that the Ford Administration is completing work on legislation to bao warrantless wiretaps in the United States suggests that the Government did learn something coostructive from Watergate.

While law-enforcement authorities bave been required under the Omnibus Crime Control Act of 1968 to obtain warrants for criminal investigations, national security and foreign intelligence taps may still be installed on the authority of the Attorney General alone. It is a power which has been badly abused as the F.B.I. taps on the late Martin Luther King Jr. and the 1969 White House taps demonstrated.

The new bill, which is being developed by Attorney General Levi in close consultation with both liheral and conservative members of the Senate, would require the Government to ohtain a warrant from a judge even for wiretaps installed within this country aimed at foreign intelligence and national security information.

Some rather aubstantial questions are as yet unresolved-for example, whether tapa will be authorized to investigate conduct which does not rise to the level of a Federal crime. But the general outlines of an excellent bill have already been accepted by President Ford, and there is optimism both in the executive branch and on Capitol Hill that agreement on strong legislation can be achieved.

The progress made so far has been a demonstration of the United States Government operatiog at its best, with liberal Secators and a conservative President putting politics aside to achieve a purpose of fundamental importanca to the American people. More than anything else, the progress ia attributable to the determination of Attorney Geoeral Levi to demonstrate that the rule of law still prevails.

Rhodesia Facing War

There was never much chance that the talks between the white minority Government and one faction from the black African majority would produce a workable agreement for Rhodesia's political future. Even if these negotiators had been able to agree on a constitutional blueprint, it might well have been repudiated by more radical African leaders, including those preparing in Mozambique for guerrilla warfare against Rhodesia.

The talks between Prime Minister Ian Smith and black nationalist leader Joshua Nkomo broke down over the issue that has frustrated every major black-white negotiation in Rhodesia even print to the unilateral seizure of independence by the white regime in 1965: the timetable for the transition to majority rule in a country where blacks outnumber whites by 24 to 1,

Mr. Nkomo had demanded majority rule within a year or two. He says Mr. Smith's proposals would have delayed the transfer of power to the hlack majority for another 10 to 15 years-no genuine advance over the 1961 Rhodesian Constitution imposed by Britain. In short, the white Government in the recent negotiation made oo aignificant concession on the key issue.

Mr. Nkomo warns that in digging in for preservation of white rule-and, he might have added, by refusing to negotiate realistically with the most moderate hlack leader-Mr. Smith bas "cbosen war." In existing circumatances it is difficult to challenge that somber assessment. Having denied Britain's authority in Rhodesia for a decade, Mr. Smith ironically now asks Loodon to 'actively assist" in the search for a settlement and even hints that he might be prepared to abandon his 1965 declaration of independence.

About all Britain can do, bowever, is to try to get Mr. Smith to confront reality io southern Africa; to warn him yet again that by obstructing peaceful transition to majority government be risks catastrophic black-white war which the whites cannot win. Secretary of State Kissinger's warning last week that the United States "will do nothing to belp the white minority to exercise authority In Rhodesia" ought also to belp in getting the white rulers in Salisbury finally to face the issue.

The Steel Steal

The economic ideologues of the Ford Administration lose no opportunity to aing the praises of the market system and to limit Government intervention for social reasons. But somebow all these strictures are easily forgotten when competition proves painful for some part of the constituency.

There was no mention of the glories of the free market mechanism in President Ford's decision to restrict imports of specialty steels, affecting one-tenth of the industry's output, in the wake of a finding of injury by the United States International Trade Commission. On the contrary, instead of limiting special protection to this one narrow sector-which is all that the 1974 Trade Act requires-Mr. Ford has Instructed his trade negotiator, Frederick Dent, to seek limitations on imports of all types of steel.

The decision is little improved by holding up unilateral import quotas for 90 days to seek agreements in restraint of trade with the American steel industry's chief competitors in Europe and Japan. So-called "voluntary" export quotas adopted abroad penalize foreign producers and American consumers as much as import quotas imposed by the United States.

What most troubles America's trading partners abroad is the precedent set by this first significant protectionist move under the new trade act. Previously, American business had to prove unfair competition, such as subsidies or dumping, to obtain special protection; now, even If competition is fair, a finding of injury to American producers can trigger import quotas or higher tariffs.

The new round of trade liberalization now in oegotiation at GATT in Geneva will inevitably be affected. The American move on steel will make it more difficult for the Common Market to offer concessions in other fields, such as agriculture. The Europeans particularly resent being punished for an iocrease in Japanese steel exports to the United States; Common Market exports of specialty ateels actually declined last year.

Dozeos of American industries are pressing for protection under the new trade act-and recommendations for higher tariffs on shoes already await Presidential decision by April 20. The uncertainties alone will put a damper on the Geneva talks, even if direct retaliation is avoided.

With American exports now exceeding $107 billion a year, and the United States exporting far more to Europe and the world than it is importing, many European and Japanese industries would welcome an excuse for further protectionIst moves on the part of their own governments. High unemployment provides added temptation for all governments to keep foreign competition out.

It is neither in the American interest nor that of the industrial world as a whole to head into a trade war that would further delay recovery from the recession. For it is the slow comeback that is injuring sales and employment everywhere far more than the marginal impact of imports from abroad.

Spring

Yesterday's vernal equinox was a signpost, nothing more. It said that spring lies ahead, that our part of the earth now comes to the place in the annual sequence where sap rises, buds open, life is renewed. Not necessarily today, hut soon; for spring is now an inevitability. Spring and change. Winter's dehris may clutter the roadside and murk the brooks, but the cleanliness of new green is already in sight in protected corners, new grass, crocuses, daffodil tips.

It seems so simple. And it is so old, this aeason we call spring, older than the hills themselves. Yet it is vastly detailed and, like life itself, infinitely varied. And there is an enduring simplicity in which all living things participate. That is the essential fact of life. Life persists. Life reproduces. It animates growth. It evolves into a million different forms. Yet there it is, in a microscopic fleck of matter, in a seed, in an insect, in an animal. It is the force that has thus far eluded our analysts and researchers, yet it is the very force that animates the search. Life,

And spring is the periodic resurgence of life. It is the world around us burgeoning with life renewed. It is a season, an astronomical consequence in which we are fortunate enough to participate. Complex beyond words, it also is life renewed and made evident to any witness who happens to be here to see. It is as simple as that.

Kissinger Policy: 'The Positive Spin-Offs'

At a time when Henry Kissinger is the target of a good deal of criticism, it is only fair to recognize his major achievements, one of which was symbolized by Egyptian President Sadat's abrogation of his treaty with the Soviets.

A long-standing strategy of Mr. Kissinger's has been to revise the oeutral Eisenhower Doctrine and the inflexible pro-Israeli policy of succeeding Administrations, which left the U.S. at a disadvantage vis-à-vis the Arab world, and Egypt in particular.

Under Mr. Kissinger, the U.S. has been able to enter the area and exert a strong enough influence (including the winning of Mr. Sadat's confidence as insurance against future trouble with his alleged Soviet friends) to split off former clients of Moscow: In a sense, this is what happened in another of Kissinger's accomplishments - the breakthrough to Peking during Nixoo's Presidency. The creation of a triangular structure-Moscow/Peking/Washington-spreads fissures throughout the third world, making the whole post-1955 Soviet policy toward the developing countries something less than monolithic or totally successful. Already Peking has congratulated Sadat on his decision to part company with the Kremlin; this may set an example for other African natioos, iocluding those south of the Sahara.

Paking's go-it-alone policy, but with some important support from America, has its analogue in the hreaking away from Moscow oo the part of Yugoslavia back in 1948 and in the "revisigoism" now practiced by some of the West European Communist Parties. Many of the "centrifugal" phenomena of more recent years were abetted by the kind of flexibility shown hy all strategy. The positive spin-offs from Kissingerism are sometimes slow to materialize, but they are beginning to materialize now, with more on the way as Egypt, Saudi Arahia and other Arab countries join in the support of Sadat's and Kissinger's effort to realign the loyalties of the Middle East. U.S.-Egyptian Crossroads

To the Editor:

The recent news concerning the end of the Soviet-Egyptian Treaty of Friendship and Cooperation raises two very interesting questions concerning the diplomatic efforts of our State Department to achieve peace in the Aliddle Last:

1. If President Sadat and the Egyptian Assembly can unilaterally abrogate a signed and valid treaty with Russia, what is to prevent them from doing the same with any legal commitments which are made with the United States. and with Israel? Of what value are their signed treaties?

2. If the Egyptian Government is in such dire need of financial and military support from the United States, is this not an ideal time to reassess our policy toward Egypt? If the pressure tactic of withholding financial and military aid from Israel during our last reassessment was a legitimate course to follow, is it oot fair, in the spirit of evenbandedness, to apply the same pressures against Egypt?

Can it really be our policy that with one band we withhold aid from a friend of long standing and with the other we militarily supply its enemy? Is it our policy to buy Egyptian loyalty as the Russians did?

Medical Schools: What Tax Billions Buy

I read with concero and dismay Harry Schwartz' March 14 Week in Review article concerning health manpower legislatinn, which does not fairly portray the public policy issues now heing considered by the Congress. The simple truth is that If the Association of American Medical Colleges and the American Medical Association had taken the steps oecessary to train a proper balance of physicians and to make an active effort to see that the underserved areas of this oatinn had doctors there would not now be the support in the Congress for direct intervection to achieve these

The American people have generously supported medical schools for many years. Over the last decade the Federal Government bas sppropriated $3.5 billion to America's medical schools; 50 percent of the operating budgets of medical schoola comes from Federal tax dollars. Most of these funds come from low- and middleincome Americans.

Yet, according to the most recent study by the A.A.M.C., while 60 percent of all American families earn less than $15,000 a year, only 35 percent of the studeots in medical schools are their children. While only 12 percent of American familles earn more than $25,000 a year, 37 percent of the students in medical schools today are their childreo.

For years the medical schools bave

oot accepted the full measure of responsibility in the admission of qualified low-income students, minorities and women. For years most medical schools have trained an overahundance of super-specialists, such as surgeous, far beyood the nation's need for such practitioners. These physicians perform unnecessary operations, further escalare the akyrocketing costs of health care and oeedlessly place ton many Americans in peril of their own

Physicians are wealthy. A doctor's average income is $55,000 a year. Mr. Schwartz misses the point wheo be questions why the Government would intervene to assure that physicians' services are available more equitably when It bas not so intervened regarding the distribution of lawyers, accountants, architects and engineers. None of the schools which train these other professionals are so heavily supported by the taxpayer's dollar.

I believe Mr. Schwartz' article would have been a far more balanced assessment of this complicated legislation had it included some of the background which gives rise to the growing dissatisfaction of the Congress with the expenditure of billions of dollars with so little payoff for the public.

Of Power and Profit

To the Editor:

Prof. George Wald writes in his Feb. 29 Op-Ed article: "The real guestion we face is whether nuclear power can be produced safely while maximining profit. The answer to that

I must differ with Professor Wald and rephrase tha above into a twopart question;

Can we safely produce electricity while maximizing profit? We have many generations of affirmative proof. Can we safely convert from fossil fuels to nuclesr fuels while maximizing profit? We have eighteen years (almost a geoeration) of proof that we can do it safely, and with fossil fuels increasing in cost there is every evidence the profits so far realized in prototypes will be greatly improved in future ouclear installations.

Stamp Out Stamp Licking

Corporate

Iso't it about time the Postal Service got into the twentieth century by issuing a postage stamp with pressuresensitive glue to do away with the archaic, unsanitary and probably disease-producing habit of most people who apply a stamp that has previously passed through many hands with a solution of saliva from the tongue?

There are many types of pressuresensitive labels available to business and some pressure-sensitive mailing envelopes, which should be made increasingly available.

It is my understanding that the dangerous PCB's are used in some types of glues, and while I am not aware that they are used in the glue on postage stamps, it would be a good argument for the pressure-sensitive type if they are.

fn any event, I am sure that most people, excluding perhaps smokers, who probably couldn't care less, would at least like to have a choice even though it might cost a cent or two more to protect their health.

The chances are that he won't make it all the way to the top, and will have to settle for the Vice-Presidency. He starts from scratch and Mr. Ford starts from ao accidental Presidency, which is quite a difference, but even so, Carter might just be closer to the loogings of the people for new younger leaders and ideas than anybody else, and take the Democratic Party over, against lts will, as Jack Rennedy, with different values and fewer ideals, did in 1960, ...

Mr. Carter is not talking about "coofrontation" with our adversaries, lika Senator Jackson, or about ideology, like Governor Reagan oo the right and Fred Harris on the left, but about cooperation, reconciliation and even about "love." He is very romantic about all this, and It infuriates his opponents, but it still touches some

"We are not enemies but friends," Mr. Lincoln said in his First Inaugural Address. "We must not be enemies. Though passion may have strained, it must not break our bonds of affectioo. I think there is something of this same yearning in the success of Ford and Catter in our own election. Whatever else they are, they ere the opposite of the fancy articulate ways of Kennedy, the cunning techniques of Johnsoo, and the illegal, unspeakable outrages of Nixoo.

The American voters seem to be responding to these plain and undramatic campaigns of Mr. Ford and Mr. Carter, and this could in the end be important, or even decisive. The other politicians, the universities and the press may not like it, but maybe the majority of the American people

In breaking with orthodoxy, these parties bave variously cited their experience since the Russian Revolution as demonstrating that the Soviet way was not applicable to them, and some have referred to Lenin's insistence that each nation must find, its own road to socialism. They have argued that the many changes in capitalism, including the effects of the large-scale upheavals of world war and the ensuing colonial liberation struggles, compel a reassessment of fundamentals, especially by declared devotees of Marxist dia-

In short, Communists have been painfully correcting the profound error of having accepted as universal the Russian experience of 1917. Soma corrections were initiated before Mr. Khrusbchev's 1956 revelations, but the process has been accelerating. In particular, the original thesis that it makes no difference to the working class whether capitalist rule takes democratic or fascist form was discarded following Hitler's accession to power, but this was considered a tactical change, required by the antifascist struggle. Now democracy is perceived not simply as an instrument of bourgeois rule. but as something that working people bave fought for, used effectively and

All this argues strongly against the ldea that the changes are merely tactical, Most Americans will thus need to undergo some conceptual revisions of their own, such as the assumption that "Communist" is automatically the antithesis of "democratic." The "menace" of socialism, as perceived by our official spokesmen, will doubtless loom larger as a consequence of Communist discarding of old dagmas and orthodox rigidities. percent, hardly any worse than the rate Mr. Ford's policies will generate by the end of this year. This is a recovery? This is "sound and steady"

The Democrats' Congressional budget committees have just pointed out that even such recovery as there has been -unemployment down from 9.2 percent at one point in 1975-probably will slow to a virtual standstill after the election and in 1977. Mr. Ford'a "sound and steady" policies, actually point toward renewed restraint on the economy, not sensible expansion; and just this week his releatless. Treasury Secretary, William Simon, said their goal was to cut the rate of inflation, now at about 6 percent, to 2 percent. That could hardly be done in an expanding or high employment economy. not with any policies Mr. Simon would tolerate. Mr. Heller estimated, in fact, that the net effect of Mr. Ford's budget and tax proposals, if enacted mostly unchanged, would be a $30-billion restrictive swing in Government impact on the economy between now and the summer of 1977. "A restrictiva swing of that magnitude," Mr. Heller said. "took a terrible toll in jobs and output in 1959-60 and again in 1973-74." As for Government itself, Mr. Ford wants to hold spending levels for fiscal 1977 to $394 billion, when the best estimate is that a budget of at least $414 billion is needed just to maintain services and commitments at fiscal 1976 levels.

It is true that Coogress is unlikely to support all Mr. Ford's proposals. What sense does it make to raise tha regressive Social Security payroll tax, for example, thus increasing business costs and lowering take-home pay, when economic recovery is still embryonic and there is ample time to deal with the fiscal needs of the Social Security trust fund?

It is also true that the Hawkins-Humphrey full employment bill has been revised and improved by the Democrats, and has impressive sopport, including organized labor. Presumably, this bill if passed would be vetoed by Mr. Ford, with Mr. Simon beaming in the background. That would nicely draw the employment issue for the fall campaign.

The trouble is that in the absence of an agreed-upon Democratic candidate; Mr. Ford can use his White House pulpit virtually unchallenged to paint his rosy pictures of recovery and his cartoons of the Democrats as wildeyed spenders. And the sponsors of the Hawkins-Humphrey bill tended to play into his hands by refusing to include any mechanism to cootrol wages and prices, despite the inflatiooary risks-which Mr. Ford and Mr. Simon will surely exaggerate - in trying to bring unemployment down to 3 per-

No Democratic program, moreover, now contemplates the amount of public employment that is really needed, the taxes to pay for it, or the necessary combining of public sector needs with public employment programs. And no Democratic -candidate - much wants to talk about such things, much less wage-and-price controls, for fear that Gerald Ford will brand a scarlet "S" for "spender" on his forehead.

Thinking the Unthinkable ROME-Enrico Berlinguer, head of FOREIGN AFFAIRS

the Italian Communist Party which aspires to sharing control of this country's Government, insists that when-and if his massive Marxist apparatus assumes ministerial respooaibility it will remain a faithful supporter of NATO for so long as it

"We are ready to accept the obligations attached to membership until such a time when military blocs are replaced by other security systems," he told me during an extended conversation. "We will honor the duties assumed in the alliance by preceding governments-if we become a member of the Government.

"But we are against loterference by other alles in our affairs-especially the United States-using NATO as an excuse." Mr. Berlinguer obviously referred to recent statements by President Ford, Secretary Kissinger and Gen. Alexander Haig, the alliance commander, warning that NATO could not tolerate Communist participation in its member governments.

This attitude, he insisted, was "an obvious attempt to interfere in Italian internal affairs. We favor membership in NATO and friendship with the U.S.A. This does not justify the kind of remarks made by Ford, Kissinger and Haig. It is not useful for U.S. interests. What does Washington want for Europe and Italy?"

Thus a question bitherto unthinkable among North Atlantic leaders has now been posed in a significant way. It is not the first time the problem was faced, however, as West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt reminds us.

Precedents on a relatively minor scale have already been established. lived with and overcome with respect to Communist ministers in Icelandic and Portuguese Cabinets. Mr. Berlinguer cites Chancellor Schmidt's comment and agrees the tough Bonn Social Democrat can scarcely be accused of Communist sympathies.

By C. L. Sulzberger

The Italian Marxist believes means of working out apparently difficult problems can be arranged between NATO and a Rome government containing Communist members. He insists he doesn't want to risk upsetting the present power balance because that might bring Europe closer to war. Any cooflict involving this region could destroy the world.

Indeed, the existing military blocs constitute a factor for international security and can only be replaced eventually by some other guarantee of continued peace. There is, for him, no alternative to détente. It is not an easy process but if it collapses a hot war would become almost inevitable.

Yet while avoidance of bolocaust is paramount. Italy's own internal situation must be improved. For Berlinguer this could only be achieved by restructuring the political basis of goveroment through a "bistorical compromise" between Communists and all other parties not tainted by Fascism or right-wing extremism. Further delay io reaching such an accord would be critically dangerous for Italy's economy and political stability, he reckons. · He strongly disagrees with Aleksandr

Mr. Berlinguer views Communist participation in a Rome Government as a necessity.

Solzhenitsyn's thesis that national factors can have no effect oo Communism because it is a pure ideological theory and practice conceived by Marx and elaborated by Lenin. He claims Italy demoostrates how wrong the Russian author is.

The Commuoists here, he indicates, would not be satisfied with a left-wing coalition government including themselves, Socialists and Social-Democrats. They want basic participation with the Christian Democrats because of Italy's deeply Catholic roots.

"But we are not in a hurry." Berlioguer adds. 'There are no crises in our party and there won't be until we gain a share of the government power. Even then crises will be minor. This country needs to change its political direction." His view is clearly that Communist participation has become a national necessity and the existing Cabinet, lacking a parliamentary majority, is paralyzed.

And be adds a word of reassurance that the Communists would give up their ministries and withdraw from government if the voting' pattern changed and parliament demanded this. "We wouldn't do this happily," he says, "but we will respect the parliamentary rules. If there is a major change in votiog sentiment and the deputies so desire, we will go." This is an abstruse question; the terms of the Communists getting in haven't been settled so how can one analyze the terms of their getting out? But the subject becomes more moot each day as the weary Italian political, economic and industrial structure shakes.

It seems to me that NATO must seriously pooder the issues involvednot just on a black and white basis, but perhaps along lines of a more subtle modus operandi as implicitly suggested by Chancellor Schmidt. Even the unthinkable must be thought

Sheriff Harold Bray of Golden, Colo., likes aides who can analyze not only a set of fingerpriots but a Socratic dialogue as well. In his search for a new deputy sheriff, be ran an ad in Jobs in Philosophy. a périodical of the American Philosophical Association. The ad described the job and said that preference would be given to "Ph.D.'s with specialization in classical and/ or early modern philosophy."

Sheriff Brav says it has been his-experience that men with doctorates in philosophy have "the abilities and expertise to understand changing times" that are necessary for a modern sheriff. Duncan Bradley, a present deputy who earned his doctorate at Southern Illinois University with a dissertation on Spinoza, egrees and notes that such thinking bas a long history. "After all," he says, "Plato made philosober of master's, doctoral and professional degrees has risen steadily since 1963 and should continue to do so at least through 1983. At no time in recent years, however, have the job prospects for these degree-holders looked worse, expecially at the doctoral level. The Division of Occupational Outlook of the Bureau of Labor Statistics estimates that during the period from 1972 to 1985 an estimated 563,000 new Ph.D.'s will be competing for 187,000 jobs of the kind traditionally sought by holders of doctorates. The surplus will be most striking in the arts and humanitles and in education, where the ratio of candidates to job openings will be more than five to one.

least outnumber those who do not. These prospects mean, as John Silber, the president of Boston University, put it recently, that "two out of three of these professionals will never practice the professions for which, at great societal and persocal investment, they have been trained."

In the face of such predictions, the pressure on universities to cut down oo graduate programs is intense. 'When state legislators hear of 300 Ph.D.'s interviewing for only five jobs, they become reluctant to provide more money for expeneraduate 'prograi Robert M. Lumianski, president of the American Council of Learned

Societies. The Board of Regents in New York State is already involved in a dispute with the State University over efforts to close down what it regards as low-quality graduate Educators, though, are reluctant to get ioto large-scale cutting of difficult to predict which individuals major research breakthrough. Some conteod that predictions of manpower needs five years hence are ing their decisions.

At the same time, there is movement away from the traditional model of graduate education geared to basic research and to students who are studying full-time and fresh out of undergraduate programs. Graduate schools, for instance, are redesigning programs with new mind. For some time the American for M.A.'s.

Another area with obvious employment potential is iodustrial research, which until now has had a negative image among many graduate students. "They see it as a second class job, one that is takeo if no academic job is available," Bruce Hannay, a vice president of Bell Laboratories, said to a recent educational gathering. .

This, too, is beginning to change. The University of California at Berkeley recently started an engineering doctorate program aimed explicitly at industry. Students take an internship and work on an industrial problem in lieu of a traditional dissertation.

Movement is slow, bowever, oot only because of traditional mistrust between businessmen and academicians but because of student assessmeots of their own abilities.

"Graduates have to think of themselves not only as specialists in a particular area but as persons who bave developed critical analytical abilities that are broadly useful." says Dorothy Harrison of the New York State Department of Education. 'The head of market research at Maidenform, for iostance, did a dissertation oo Chaucer at the University of Chicago. Research on Chaucer and research on lingerie are oot all that

Graduate schools are going after . new types of students, not only underrepresented segments of the population, such as women and blacks, but also persons who are aiready employed but willing to pursue doctoral and other advanced studies on a part-time basis. This, in turn, has led to more flexible styles of operation.

Nova University in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., which was established in 1964, offers doctorates io education through 25 regional centers to working school administrators. Walden University in Naples, Fia., assembles students on its campus each summer to develop proposals' and then sends them home to work with academic advisers on a cootract basis. The Union Graduate School in Yellow Springs, Ohio. has a sophisticated program that combines on- and off-campus work and study.

There are even new types of degrees. Columbia University and the University of California at Los Aogeles are among those that offer combined master's degrees in business and public health. Others are putting together language and business studies.

Approximately two dozen institutions bave experimented with a new Doctor of Arts degree that stresses pedagogical techniques and teaching internships rather than basic research. This degree serves as an alternative to the Ph.D. for professors who are primarily interested in teaching. The New York State Education Department is pushing the Doctor of Arts idea but in such a way that it will avoid the pitfalls of other states, where it has not been particularly successful.

"It stayed under the control of Ph.D. faculty members who were still oriented to research," says T. Edward Hollender, deputy commissioner. "Given the choice, most students took the Ph.D."

Which is one reason why it's a short way from the Golden Age of Greece to Golden, Colo.

With the cooperation of 64 urologists and 149 of their private patients, investigators from the Laboratory for Stone Research at Harvard recently turned up a striking finding.

Just one prinary stone can be an all-too-memorable affair, producing back pain, or renal colic with its ing intermittent pain in flank or kidney area radiating across the abdomen. It may produce nausea, vomiting, abdominal distention, and chills and fever

The 149 patients didn't have just one stone. They were chronic arinary stone formers. They were selected for a special study because they had histories, in every case, of stone formation dating back five years.

They were given 10 milligrams of vitamin known as pyridoxine; to take daily, along milligrams of magnesium oxide. The study w more than 412 years. And although none tients was known to be outrightly deficie stone production decreased from an averag slones per patient per year before treatmer stones per patient per year. Late in 1974, it gaiors reported that the treatment not only and completely harmless."117

Dr. X, the suspected villain in a series of New

finally been identified. He is Dr. Mario E. Jascalevich, a surgeon with an active practice in New Jersey.

Dr. Jascalevich's name was revealed when it was learned that the Bergen County Prosecutor would seek an indictment against him for the murder of one or more persons at Riverdell Hospital. The case was reopened after an extensive inquiry by The New

said that at least nine of the deaths were not attributable to natural causes or the causes listed, but were consistent with death caused by a fast acting poison

have revealed some traces of curare. Eighteen empty

Settling an Old Score Nikos Sampson, a Greek-Cypriot extremist who briefly served as president of Cyprus after Archbishop Makarios was violently deposed as President in July, 1974, has been arrested and charged with complicity in that coup. Archbishop Makarios was overthrown by a coup jointly planned by the then ruling military junta in Greece and the ultra-right Greek-Cypriot underground, led by Mr. Sampsoo, in Cyprus. When the Turkish Government responded by sending troops to Cyprus, the military government in Greece fell, and Mr. Sampson was forced out of office. Mr. Makarios resumed the Presidency in December of 1974, and declared an amnesty for all. However, centrist groups in the Greek-Cypriot community became alarmed at what they called the "unrepentant" attitudes of extremists such as Mr. Sampson, and asked the Cypriot Government to act

A Scene Not in the Script The circumstances surrounding the arrest in

Jaouary of Ingmar Bergman, the Swedish movie director, on charges of evading $118,000 of income taxes through a dummy corporation, have become the subject of intensive and sometimes bitter debate in Sweden. Mr. Bergman was seized abruptly while rehearsing a play, io a manner befitting a persoo suspected of committing a somewhat more violent crime than that he was accused of, and questioned for more than three hours. Shortly after his arrest. Mr. Bergman suffered an emotional breakdown, and he bas just oow returned from the clinic where he was being treated. The treatment accorded Mr. Bergman has raised questions about increased police powers that have accompanied the growth of Sweden's large social bureaucracy, and about pressures within Swedish society to conform and not to be different in any way. Intellectuals and theater people have supported Mr. Bergman; left wing and populist periodicals have warned against special treatment for him.

Rejoining the Crowd

Ramsey Clark has joined what promises to be a crowded field of contenders for the Democratic nomination to oppose Sen. James L. Buckley, Republican-Conservative of New York, in November. Mr. Clark is a former United States Attorney General and was a loser as the Democratic candidate against Jacoh Javits, New York's other Senator, in 1974. Abraham Hirschfeld, a Manhattan businessman, and Assemblyman Andrew Stein have already entered the race for the nomination, and at least three other prominent New York politicians have expressed interest in running.

BATON ROUGE, La., March 20-Al McGuire, Marquette's outspoken basketball coach, spoke once too often today and cost his team its final opportunity to upset Indiana when he orew a technical foul with 25 seconds remaining and his team trailing by only 3 points.

His action so stunned the 14,150 persons at the National Collegiate Athletic Association Mideast Regional final that even the Indiana fans were quiet. Then the Hoosier followers began, with reason, their loud chant: "We're No. 1."

Less than a half-minute later, undefeated Indiena had a 65-56 victor: over Marquette in this long-awaited battle between the No. 1ranked team in the nationthe Hoosiers-and the No. 2 team-the Warriors.

Indiana heads for Philadelphia where it will play in the national semifinals next Saturday against the University of California, Los Angeles, the defending champions. This 38th victory of the season by Indiana and the earlier triumph by 31-0 Rutgers at. Greensboro, N. C., established this 38th N.C.A.A. basketball tournament as the first to have two undefeated teams in the semi-final round. While on the surface, at least, it appeared that the two leagues would be fight-. ing for one city, everyone involved denied that the leagues were at war.

ning the way he ran yesterday in the $56,300 Bay Shore Stakes at Aqueduct, the Derby could become a suspense story in a hurry.

Opposing seven rival 3year-olds in the seven-furlong Bay Shore, the Puerto Rican-owned colt broke the stakes record and came within three-fifth of a second of Dr. Fager's track record with a 7%-length runaway in 1:20 4/S.

"He's eveo nicer than I thought," said the winner's jockey, Angel Cordero. "I hit him a couple of times because I wanted to know if he could firish strong. Now 1

Cordero, grinning as if he had just found himself a top Derby contender, sailed bis whip like a javelin halfway across the paddock as he brought Bold Forbes back to the cheers of Spanisb-speaking admirers. The colt, a winner of five races in Puerto Rico last year, is the biggest Latin favorite here since Canonero. .

Hold your horses before yesterday, at least not in the combined ontrack-offtrack wagering. The crowd of 34,-744, the largest Saturday turnout of the long season that began last Jan. 2, actually bet the most money on Bold Forbes, But heavy offtrack action for Lord Henribes (even money compared to 2-I on Bold Forbes) enabled the former to go off as the 7-5 favorite, with Bold Forbes second choice at 8-5.

For the record, Eustace finished second, Full Out third and Lord. Henribee fourth. GREENSBORO, N.C., March 20-The record book will always show that the Rutgers basketball team was 16 points better than the Virginia Military Institute team today. The final score will always read: Rutgers 91,

But neither the book nor the score will ever he as important as the time. Because Rutgers was really only 4 minutes 37 seconds better than V.M.I.-4 minutes 37 seconds of solid, perfect basketball.

It came as suddenly as a summer squall at the end of the first half, and it blew Rutgers through the Eastern Regional of the National Collegiate Athletic Association tournament and into next week's national semifinal in Philadelphia, where it plays Michigan.

"Forgel about it, John, she's good for 10 years," he said. More than that, as it turns out. For all yesterday afternoon, as Al Mc-Guire's Marquette team played Indiana pionships, here was Winnie McGuire-I did not have to see her to tell you exactly what she was doing-here was Winnie McGuire sitting in froot of the television set in her living room, turning it off during commercials to save the tubes and rooting for ber son to win everything. Which he will. Oh, it doesn't matter what bappened in the game yesterday.

One basket here or there, one game woo or lost, is not going to determine what happens to Al McGuire. His intensity must wear down the life around him. Give bim time and there can be no opponents, only dust.

I weot out for a drink the other night and I was standing at the bar with Jimmy Weston, who owns a sawith Jimmy Weston, who owns a sa-loon, and we were watching Al McGuire talking on television. Something hap-pens when he comes onto a screen. Most people are talking heads, some-thing to stare at but McGuire is alive, moving, drawing you into what he is saying. And he was talking quickly, with sentences that were connected with sentences that were connected to each other, forming a flow, and his word choices were excellent.

Jimmy Weston squinted. -"Where did be learn all the words. He don't know what any of those words mean," Jimmy said. Where did be learn the words? There was a time when Al McGuire was learning his trade, when he was coach at Belmont Abbey College in North Carolina, and the school also made him teach a couple of classes. "How do you get the nerve?" I asked

"It's nothing," Al said. "All you got to do is stay six pages ahead of the class. When somebody asks me a question I can't answer, I say, 'It'll take too much time to explain. See me after class. Now we have two doors in each classroom. When the ### period ends, I run out whichever door the kid isn't near." Putting Clamp on Cousy

More than aoybody we have had in our set out in Queens, Al McGuire understood just how vulnerable the world is to a brasb remark.

When he was playing basketball for the New York Knickerbockers, he found himself guarding Bob Cousy of the Boston Celtics one night. He staved all over Cousy and cut his scoring way down. After the game, Al gave a regal wave of his hand and announced, "I own Cousy."

Now, newspapers always are silly enough to attach importance to a state-ment like this. When Al saw his words the headlines the next day, he shrugged and decided that it was true, In the next few games against the Celtics, he almost carried the thing off. So much so, that when Cousy had one of his typical nights, scoring 55 points or so against the Knickerbockers, the New York sports writers wrote that it was an accident.

And maybe more than anyone else from out there, he grew and made himself understand that, no, the real world is not the one from which he came. And Al McGuire looked at a problem of life formed by division of he has taken on everything else.

I keep thinking of one night when Marquette was in New York to play St. John's and we had dinner with people we had known for a long time and Al began to talk about blacks, about the stands they must take in order to get what had been stolen from them at birth, and you could see the others at the table were puzzled. They had remained and be had gone on. And he is still young and he will go on further. ...... A-little of it has touched brother John, who remains in Queens. John now has a saloon, Pep McGuire's, on Queens Boulevard, and when business went sour a few months back. John decided to "change policy." Instead of a new orchestra, John brought in a new type of customer: men who dance with one another.

"What the hell, ask Allie, he's the one taught me. It's a whole new world," says Joho, who prospers with a packed bar and enjoys his oew title, "The King of Queens.

Overtime_Periods In Hockey-Recalled

To the Sports Editor:

Not many National Hockey League fans are aware that until World War II. a 10-minute overtime period was played in an effort to decide tie games. As passenger trains became scarce and in the "interest" of the war effort, the extra period was discontinued for the duration. I suggest that some one inform the league president that the war is over and that the potential tiebreaker overtime period be resumed.

on the slogan, "He kept us out of war." opposed by Charles Evans Hughes, who as Governor of New York had outlawed bookmaking and chased horse racing out of the state for a couple of years.

"The campaign was hard-fought," Phil writes, "with Hughes an 8-to-5 favorite. Betting was heavy. Arnold Rothstein, a strong Republican backer, laid my brother, Isidor, $80,000 on Hughes to $50,000. Those two were high rollers who often locked horns, and their keen dislike for each other lent a special flavor to the action.

"At the time, Beebe and Barney Feinberg operated a theater ticket office at 42d Street and Broadway, Election Day was always big in New York, with nuge throngs jamming the Great White Way. This was before radio and tele-vision, and a screen about three stories high was installed on the north side of The Times Building, the triangular structure in Times Square. Commencing at 6 P.M., returns were flashed on the screen. Excitement was high, and the streets were closed to traffic for blocks.

"My brother and Barney were busy with customers and I was delegated to report the changing returns. It was a tiring but excitlog job, and the fluctuating figures kept everyone tense. Beehe seemed the least concerned.

President Hughes

"About 6 o'clock I was shocked to see the flash: 'N.Y. Tribune reports the election of Hughes.' I returned to the office sadly and my brother asked, Well, what's the latest?' I hesitated, theo stammered, 'It's not clear yet, the reports are all mixed up.'

"He sensed my evasiveness, 'Phil,' he aaid, 'just what did it say?' I told him. 'Oh, well,' be said, 'there's always something coming up where you can start a parlay going again.' By then customers had thinned out and Iz said, Come on, Phil, let's take the subway and get bome before the mob.'

"As we passed the screen, a news flash came on: 'Election of Hughes practically assured. Returns from Republican California awaited.' My brother smiled, 'Come on, let's go, and don't call me in the morning. I'll probably sleep iill 3. I'm tired.' That was the only adverse reaction he showed.

"Next morning the news was the same. 'Hughes elected, waiting for California results to make it official.' When I went to the office about 11 o'clock I was surprised to find Arnold Rothsteio there. He asked for Beebe nd I told him he didn't want to he called. 'I must speak 10 him,' Rothstein sald. 'It's important.' Reluctantly I gave him the number, which he called. My sister answered, and after a moment told A. R. that Iz would be down around 4 o'clock.

"'Nothing doing." "Rothstein was furious, 'This is your last chance to save something. I'll give you $10,000 to clear it right now."

"'Arnold,' Beehe said, 'get the hell out of here. It's all or nothing and that's final. Don't bother me again.' "As A. R. stalked out, Feinberg said, 'Gee, B., 10 grand is better than now than I did before the election.' "That night and the next day returns from California were incomplete and confusing. A message came from Arnold. He was willing to call the whole bet off. Same negative reply. The next morning came the electrifying news:

'California gives the election lo Wilson!' "What had happened? California was one of the safest Republican states. The story finally came through. Confident that California was in the bag, Hughes had canceled scheduled appearances there in order to campaign in some unimportant state like Nevada. Hiram Johosoo, who was Republican Senator from California for 28 years, was furious at the snub. He vented his feelings, and when his followers had cast their ballots, California belonged to Wilsoo
